FELDER MAKES HIS OPENING CAMPAIGN ADDRESS AT PERRY

Former Attorney General Heard by Big Audience of People Who Had Known Him Since Boyhood

CHARACTERIZES SLATON AS DOUBLE-DEALING GOV.

Alleged Lavish Expenditure of Money by Mr. Slaton Hotly Criticized—Mr. Felder to Tour State in Senate Campaign

(Special Dispatch to The Journal.) PERRY, Ga., May 9.—"A double-dealing governor, who has been classified by the people as a professional politician" was the characterization of Governor Slaton by Thomas S. Felder in the opening speech of his campaign here today.

Perry is Mr. Felder's birthplace and many of those in the audience had known the former attorney general since boyhood.

Mr. Felder discussed the card which Rufus Hutchins published in the morning papers, and declared that it revealed a duplicity on the part of the governor that would stigmatize him forever in Georgia politics. Mr. Felder said he felt a sense of humiliation that the governor of the state, who was expected to represent and typify all that is right and just, should have taken part, through his private secretary and campaign manager, in a trick to frame the primary races for his personal benefit, and to deprive the smaller counties of the county unit system which they zealously believe is the protection of their constitutional rights.

Mr. Felder said he was disappointed with the present rule of the United States, but he was not going to complain, he declared. "I believe that I can beat my present opponents under any set of rules."

EXPENDITURE OF MONEY.

Mr. Felder, however, expended money by Mr. Slaton was also criticized by Mr. Felder. He said that an honorable method, but he believed in the old time way, employed by Thomas and Bill and Stephen, that of speaking from the hustings.

"I do not believe that the people of Georgia are going to deny a man admission to the United States simply because he is a poor man and unable to send them personal letters and unbecomingly advertise all of the weekly and semi-weekly papers. I have no funds, and the only way to get a campaign in is the old-fashioned way. Therefore, I am going to go, face to face," declared Mr. Felder.

Mr. Felder also called on the governor for not resigning his office, to run for the senate.

About fifteen minutes of Mr. Felder's time was taken up in the discussion of Governor Slaton. He spoke for an hour and fifteen minutes. When he declared that the postage prosecutions were an outrage on the southern farmer he was much applauded, and he announced his purpose of introducing a bill to revise the postage statute so as to better define it. In the event he is elected, is endorsement of short terms for federal judges with a reference to Judge Rice, though he did not call the jurist by name, also elicited applause. There were about 700 at the meeting, including many ladies.

"When the people have the impression that a man is a politician, that man is politically dead," said Mr. Felder. "And I think they have that impression of Governor Slaton and justifiably so."

MR. FELDER'S SPEECH.

Mr. Felder's speech, in part, was as follows:

"Friends and fellow citizens: I thank you for your presence here today. I feel honored that you should come to hear me talk. It gives me the pleasure to make in this, the county and town of my birth, the first public speech in my campaign for the office of United States senator.

DESCRIBES HIS PERILOUS TRIP TO MEXICO CITY

Newspaper Man Sees Donkey Driven Through Streets With American Flag Tied to Its Tail

By Edwin Emerson

(Copyrighted by The Press Publishing Co., New York City.)

VERA CRUZ, May 8.—My trip to Mexico City had been in mind for weeks. I first conceived a plan to reach the capital over the Inter-Oceanic railway back beyond the break in the railroad at Vera Cruz, and so proceed a swift, unimpeded horse, but on my first attempt ran into hostile Mexican outposts, where I learned of heavy federal mobilization under General Rubio Navarro. Huerta's chief of artillery, between Las Hoyas, Jalapa, Cerro Gordo and Playa del Rio, and from the national bridge to the San Francisco bridge over the Antigua river.

I abandoned this scheme as unsafe, and, leaving my horse behind, started out over the Mexican railway. My only companions were a French naval officer, carrying legation mail; an Englishman summoned on business to the capital by Huerta; a German professor collecting rare birds; two Mexican army officers, on their way to join the army; a Mexican attorney for the railroad and one Mexican woman, the wife of one of the officers.

ESCORTED BY MEXICANS.

Leaving Vera Cruz at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, we soon reached the break in the line, six miles out, where Mexican outposts received and escorted me over the 5-mile walk to the other end of the gap. The line has been some.

County Executive Committee Called to Meet Again Monday at 12 o'clock

Because the recount of the Fifth ward ballots yesterday afternoon placed T. J. Hightower, Jr., ahead of Charles T. Turner for county commission.

Mr. Turner probably will demand a recount of all the ballots for the whole county.

Another special meeting of the Fulton county Democratic executive committee was held yesterday afternoon at 12 o'clock to hear the report of the sub-committee on the recount of the Fifth ward ballots.

Previous to the recount of the Fifth ward ballots Mr. Turner objected to any recount whatever. He finally consented to a recount of the ballots in this ward only because Mr. Hightower had intimated, in effect, that the count by the Fifth ward election managers was unfair.

But since the recount of the Fifth ward Mr. Turner has changed his position, having indicated at the conclusion of the recount that now he will not be satisfied until all the ballots, from every voting precinct, have been carefully recounted and checked.

The returns by the Fifth ward election managers gave Turner 430 votes and Hightower 81 votes. This changes the consolidated returns to a total of 4,218 for Turner and a total of 4,332 for Hightower.

Jack Burke Meets Death While Trying to Arrest Pleas Williamson

BUTLER, Ga., May 8.—Jack Burke, recently elected marshal of Butler, was shot and killed by Pleas Williamson this afternoon while Burke, in the discharge of his duty, was attempting to arrest Williamson for disorderly conduct.

Williamson, who is considered a dangerous character, especially when under the influence of whiskey, was seen by Burke, who arrested him, when William Williamson arrested and when Burke was attempting to arrest him, William Williamson drew a revolver and shot Burke in the chest. After firing his pistol and warning the sheriff, who was standing near, not to come near, he walked off and escaped unharmed.

Spectacular Feature of Monster Gathering

With every spring bubbling and sparkling, with the cool breezes blowing the tent flaps and the banners, and with the choicest spots in the camps cleared and ready for the camps of the pilgrims, Atlanta is waiting this morning for the first big caravan out of the desert. The yearly gathering of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine is due. Here is their meeting place. Tuesday is the time.

For days past they have been assembling one and two and three at a time. One caravan would come alone, and its master would stake it under some convenient date palm and devote himself quietly to rest from the journey. Two caravans, three caravans, half a dozen, have arrived from time to time. From far and near they have been gathering, saying little, showing themselves in an unusual garb, waiting for their brethren. Among them they have passed the night, for though they have come from the uttermost ends of the earth, they are brothers in the faith of the crescent, scimitar and star, and they know each other. They have watched the oasis take on its decking of gay colors, and have greeted newcomers in their company.

THE CARAVANS BEGIN.

But today the big caravan begins. Today and tomorrow the great company will grow by thousands instead of by dozens. Tonight the tom-toms and the whistles will be going. The hour is near for the gathering of the company.

In the plain English of old Dan Webster, the Shriner are coming by trainloads today.

Tonight they will have taken possession of Atlanta.

By tomorrow night the city's subjugation of Atlanta is complete as it was on a memorable occasion half a century ago when a gentleman in a blue uniform merited it in the head of an army.

By Tuesday morning the plain ordinary Atlantian will be hard to find. It will look like all the world has turned Shriner.

For this Atlanta has been preparing for days, weeks, months for a year. Out from the plans were started. Months ago the hotels began to fill with reservations for conventions starting May 10, 1914. It has been weeks the decorations planned and began their work, and since the hotels, cafes, commission merchants, packing houses ordered their quantities of extra food and other supplies. Days ago Atlanta began to take on a festive air, an attitude of anticipation.

ATLANTA AIN' READY.

Now the city is ready for the pilgrims. And now the Shriner are about to get here. Some of them have been on their way for four days. Four trainloads of Californians left their homes two weeks ago. They get here this afternoon. Other trainloads from the far northwest, the southwest, from upper Canada, started a week or more ago. They are drawing near, now, and the first of them will come. Tonight here will be others.

Tomorrow three times as many as come today will get here.

At the railway stations, the nobles of each nation and temple, with their welcomed. Train officials, Mr. Lehman, the waiting, too, to care for those of their own militant band—Oriental in uniform. Patrol bands will be marching today, from station to station, and each will be counter-marching through the streets, serenading the nobles as they pass, as the whin strikes them.

Oh, it will be a Sunday, all right. But it won't be a circumstance to tomorrow's happenings. This is the start of the big parade. The arrival of the nobles of the Mystic Shrine is due to get in this morning, from Chicago, when Medinah comes its famed Oriental band—Oriental in uniform. In music instruments that the music is played on.

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS REPORTED HELD IN MEXICO

Noted Author and War Correspondent, Arrested in Mexico City, With Medill McCormick Says New York Tribune

(By Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, May 9.—Richard Harding Davis, author and war correspondent, who was sent by the New York Tribune to Mexico City according to a dispatch published in the Tribune.

Medill McCormick, of Chicago, also is under arrest in Mexico City, according to the same dispatch.

The message says Brigadier General Johnston at Vera Cruz has received information that the two correspondents have been taken into custody.

The Tribune adds that the state department at Washington has intervened to have representations made to General Huerta for the prompt release of Mr. Davis.

Georgia Man Chosen in Mediation Conference

NEW YORK, May 9.—Joseph Rucker Taylor, mediator justice of the peace, states supreme court and Frederick W. Lehman, mediator justice of the peace, have been selected by President Wilson as representatives of the United States to confer with the Mexican government at Mexico City.

An announcement will be made by the state department tomorrow or Monday to this effect.

The decision of the president to name only two representatives comes several days ago, according to high authorities. It was impossible to ascertain the names of the president had in mind when he announced the decision, but only two representatives, one less than General Huerta named, it might be said, was believed that Major General H. Baker, of Cleveland, would be one of the representatives.

Justice Lamar's selection came tonight.

encouraged me in the positions I have taken and fought for, on public questions.

Houston county and her people are my people. My parents and grandparents lived and died in Perry, and I lived to young manhood. My affection for the people of this county has grown with the passing of the years, and happy indeed shall I be if I can merit and hold their confidence.

PLANS OF CAMPAIGN.

"I want to tell you something of the plans of the campaign as I have mapped them out and to ask your aid and help. To conduct a state-wide campaign three methods are open, personal correspondence, newspaper publicity and personal canvases. The first two of these are closed to me on account of lack of funds, and I of necessity, must resort to a personal canvass of the state. The registered voters of this state number upward of two hundred and fifty thousand, and to send to each one of these but one letter would cost more than $15,000 in postage and clerical help. One of my opponents, who has secured the executive chair, has made the public declaration that he will conduct his campaign by personal correspondence, and from the information I have received he has already flooded the state with his letters, soliciting the support of the voters. Another opponent, the distinguished congressman from the Tenth district, states that he has likewise sent to the registered voters campaign literature from the city of Washington. I want you to tell such voters as you can the reason why they have not received communications from me—that I have sent the money to defray the expense.

The newspaper publicity method, by reason of its great cost, is also barred to me. There has grown up in this state in recent years a practice of purchasing space in the newspapers for campaign matter. On account of the great number of papers and the cost of their columns the expense is enormous. None but those who have command of a large amount of money can indulge in this method of reaching the voters. I certainly cannot do so. This will explain to you why you do not see matter in the public press advertising my candidacy.

I do not believe that the time has come when a man of limited means is precluded from aspiring to a seat in the United States Senate.

MEET THE PEOPLE.

"I have determined therefore to meet the people face to face as far as time and opportunity will permit, and tell them my reasons for thinking that I am fit to serve to them in the national congress. I believe that this is the best and fairest method of all. The voters are entitled to see and hear candidates for office, in person, and they may be qualified to intelligently pass upon and judge of their fitness for the office they are seeking.

"Ours is a country of laws, and no officers whom you elect are more important than those who constitute the law-making bodies, state and national. The other departments of the government must put into execution the laws which the legislative department has made. Wise or unwise, they are bound upon the judgment which the people show in the selection of those who are to make the laws. I believe in public discussion. The people at least can never lose by it. In the days of Bob Toombs, Ben Hill and Alexander Stephens and other great men who have made the political history of the state, it was not thought unbecoming in candidates for office to engage in political discussions on the hustings.

"If I become a member of the national congress, I shall first of all stand for justice to the south and her people. I believe that the south is now coming fully into its own, and that we are in position to demand of congress impartial legislation by virtue of our strength and the righteousness of our cause. The people of the south represent, unchallenged by the influx of foreign elements, the true American citizen which makes them the hope and salvation of the union. Listen, if you please, to this just and beautiful tribute to our people, made on the floor of the senate by Mr. Hoar, at the time a senator from Massachusetts, speaking of the southerner, he said:

"They have some qualities which I can not even presume to claim in an equal degree for the people among whom I myself dwell. They have an aptness for command which makes the southern gentleman, wherever he goes, not a peer only, but a prince. They believe a love for manly and honest behavior, and the most of them, inherited from the great race from which they come, the sense of duty and the instinct of honor as no other people on the face of the earth. They are lovers of home. They have not the mean traits which grow up somewhere in places where money-making is the chief end of life. They have drive, all and giving value to all, that supreme and superlative quality, without regard to personal ambition and without yielding to the temptation of wealth, without getting tired and without getting diverted, can pursue a great public object, in and out, year after year, and generation after generation.

"If Georgia honors me with a seat in the senate, I shall keep with me at all times the high ideals and qualities of her people and so far as in me lies, render a service worthy of her greatness.

AN AGRICULTURAL PEOPLE.

"We are distinctly an agricultural people and laws which are of benefit to other states of the union are often enforced to our loss. The southern representative in the national congress should at all times exert his energies in securing the passage of measures which look to the benefit of agriculture, those which encourage the farmer in his toil, and make the products of his labor more profitable. In such a service not only the south but the whole nation will in the end be benefited, for an agriculture after all, this nation most greatly relies.

"I am, therefore, like all true democrats, against a protective tariff and in favor of a still further reduction in the tariff rates. The democratic congress has done well as far as it has gone in tariff reduction, but I hope and believe that it will go still further in the good work. As says the democratic platform:

"The high tariff is the principal cause of the unequal distribution of wealth. It is a system of taxation which makes the rich richer and the poor, poorer; under its operation the American farmer and laboring men are the chief sufferers; the tariff raises the cost of the necessities of life to them and does not protect their wages. The farmer sells largely in free markets and buys almost entirely in the protected markets.

TARIFF POLICY.

"The policy of our party in regard to the tariff has been that it should be levied solely for the necessary revenue to run the government economically administered, and not for the purpose of protection. Now as we have a law which raises revenue by the taxation of income the necessity of the tariff has been greatly lessened and it should be still further reduced and on many commodities it should entirely disappear.

"I am in hearty accord with that plank in the democratic platform which favors national aid to the state and local authorities in the construction and maintenance of good roads. There is no system of public improvements which inures to the good of all the people and enters so intimately into their daily life as the building of good roads. Distance is measured by the time which it takes to travel. Civilization progresses as the means of communication increase. Good roads bring the farmer closer to his market, thereby lessening the cost of transportation, brings his lands nearer to the cities and towns thus enhancing their value. They make schools more accessible to the children, and give opportunity for better and more efficient schools by consolidation. The benefits to be derived by the people from this class of public improvements are too numerous and too well known for me to enumerate them. Georgia has since its conquests were placed upon the public roads a splendid and lasting object lesson of the value of road building. I am in favor of this work being carried on by county, state and national aid until every state and national highway is a net work of permanent highways. Millions and millions of dollars are appropriated by congress for improving rivers for navigation, and while I would not disparage this good work yet I think that appropriations could also be used with equal advantage to the people in lessening the cost of transportation over the public roads.

"During the past few years farm labor in the south has been disorganized by prosecutions for alleged violations of the peonage statute. Peonage existed in New Mexico at the time it was ceded to the United States by the treaty with Mexico after the Mexican war. It was a part of the system of the people of the territory ceded to us. The purpose of the statute was to make illegal this system and to prohibit it. There has never been any such system in Georgia, and I think it is a mistake to suppose that the statute has reference, a person could sell his labor to another for a definite period of time and he could not abandon the service. If he did, the master had the right to pursue and reclaim him and reduce him to obedience and labor again. And the laws of that country did the matter in bringing back the fugitive. Warrants could be issued for the purpose and the person by law forced to carry out his contract with his master.

"The act of congress which prohibits peonage does not define what peonage is and the courts in attempting to do so have differed in their understanding of its meaning. I think that congress should amend this statute so as to make its meaning plain and speak the intention of congress at the time it was passed. It is worthy of note that this statute which has been on the books since 1847 has only in very recent years been used as a basis of prosecutions in the southern states. The result of these prosecutions has been to demoralize the negro farm laborer—to make him believe that there is no obligation on his part to keep his contract with his employer and that the federal courts will aid him in abandoning it.

"If I am elected to the senate, one of my first efforts will be to remedy this evil by amending the statute in a way that the courts can not misinterpret its true meaning and purpose.

REVENUE FOR PROPER JUDGES.

"I am against life tenure for federal judges. I believe that the constitution should be amended so as to the term of office for a certain number of years—say six, eight, or ten years, but let there be a time when the term ends and the judge must stand for reappointment. If he desires to continue in office, if his judges have been faithful and satisfactory official, then he may have no fear as to reappointment. If he has not, then another can be named in his stead. Resort to impeachment proceedings alone should not be required to rid the people of an unsatisfactory judge. It had done well in this regard. But as is said in the Democratic platform of equal importance with this is the reform of our rural credits, or agricultural finance.

"Congress has recently brought about a much needed reform of our currency laws. It had done well in this regard. But as is said in the Democratic platform of equal importance with this is the reform of our rural credits, or agricultural finance. It is of vital interest to the whole country, especially in the south. The question is a new one with us. European nations have for years had agricultural credit systems in successful operation to the great benefit of their farming interests. An agricultural credit system properly inaugurated and conducted will put the farmer on a better business basis. It will give him cheap money for improvements. Currency has never been elastic enough in this country to serve the use of the farmer. The banking and currency laws have never capitalized the work of the farm.

"Our banking system is adapted to the needs of manufactures and commerce and not to the agricultural interests. At present the farmer borrows money on his land by mortgages at a high rate of interest, the principal coming due all at one time with the chance that the date of maturity may still fall in a season of financial panic when it cannot be renewed. If the debt is renewed the cost of the money still greater. Borrowing money in this way is expensive and often fatal. In Europe there are land mortgage banks and associations which take care of this class of credit. They are formed on varying lines, some with stock, some having no stock, some being guaranteed by the government. All the systems are, however, formed upon certain general fundamental lines.

"Upon certain general fundamental lines the security of bonds which the associations issue and sell in the general market. The bonds have no fixed maturity but can be retired at par by the payment of a small premium at any time. The mortgagee agrees to pay the bank a certain fixed amount, usually semi-annually. This payment in part goes to the reduction of the principal of the debt. Thus the borrower at once begins to extinguish his principal and to decrease the amount of the interest charges. The debt may run for fifty years though it may be paid at any time if desired. The payment of a mortgage is anticipated then the bank goes into the market and buys or retires a corresponding amount of its bonds, so that its outstanding bonds never exceed against them.

"Georgia has a system of agricultural banks which loan one-fourth of its entire annual loans on agricultural enterprises.

"Congress has recently investigated the various systems of agricultural credit and it is to be hoped that one adapted to the conditions of our people may be established.

PEONAGE PENALTIES.

"The cancerous growth of the peonage fraud has become a national scandal. The increase in the annual appropriation for federal penitentiaries has grown each year notwithstanding the fact that the country has been in practical peace since the ending of the war between the states, fifty years ago. Last year it reached the enormous sum of more than $175,000,000. The peonage lobby at Washington is notorious. There are in excess of nine hundred and fifty thousand penitentiaries in the rolls at present. It is not difficult to understand how these wards of the nation, federated into a political machine, which permeates all lines of business, can bring to bear upon the federal congress, pressure which is almost irresistible. Under recent Republican administrations, not content with general service acts, thousands upon thousands of private penitentiaries have been passed, amending the records of the inmates, and in addition to punishing her own veterans, but by reason of the fact that we are the largest buyers of the commodities from which the national revenue is derived has been and is now bearing an unjust share of the burden.

"I do not mean to say that I alone can stem the tide, but I do say that my best efforts shall be exhausted in helping to check this monstrous evil, and in assisting in building up an overwhelming public sentiment against this ever growing menace to our nation, which I believe is the only remedy.

"I am in thorough accord with President Wilson and his policies. His masterly direction of the affairs of this nation stamp him as our greatest president. He is politically and intellectually pure. His record of accomplishments, achieved by sheer force of brain and personality, is without parallel in the history of this country. He is the militant leader of a united and triumphant democracy. He has established a new freedom. He has brought peace out of what seemed at one time to promise commercial warfare, and has given to the business world a foundation of truth and justice on which to act and build for the future. He has made it plain that the people can be trusted to do the right thing when taken into confidence, and that corruption can not live in the sunlight of publicity.

"It has only been my purpose in this address to touch upon what I consider matters of especial interest. It is unnecessary for me to say to you that I stand upon the principles of our historic party and will always be found true to its faith."

CHURCH WAY SEEK

WADSWORTH

Many Members of Special Commission Favor New University; Others Would Keep Interest in Old

OKLAHOMA CITY, May 9.—The Vanderbilt university case, one of the most important matters before the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, came up today when Judge H. D. Tanshugh, of Oklahoma, chairman of the special committee handling the case, was granted permission to call for a special feature of the session to consider the Vanderbilt case. Just before this action Bishop Warren A. Chandler had announced the appointment of Judge J. W. Bond, of Tennessee, as a member of the committee in place of C. M. Hay, of Missouri, who was unable to attend.

All sessions of the committee are being held in the case of the Vanderbilt case. It is understood that a marked opposition exists in the committee on the meaning and scope of the decision holding the church has no authority over the university.

According to several members, there is a decided majority sentiment in the committee in favor of the establishment of a new university, but no positive action has been taken. It is held by many members of the conference that some action will be found for the church to retain its interest in Vanderbilt.

MANY FLATTERING OFFERS. The committee has been advised, it is stated, that many flattering offers have been made for the establishment of a new university, should it be decided to sever its connection with Vanderbilt and establish a new institution in some other state than Tennessee.

At the conclusion of the usual devotional exercises of the morning, conducted by Dr. W. W. Chandler, of Atlanta, Bishop Chandler announced the appointment of a committee to consider the terms of the Episcopal address not referred to the committee of Rev. J. C. Wilson, North Carolina, W. D. Bradford, Texas, and T. W. Lewis, Georgia. Bishop Chandler then yielded the floor to Bishop H. C. Morris, of Tennessee, who made a statement of the committee on the subject of the case.

The report of the committee on the subject, providing for practically the same program as governed other cases, was adopted.

The arrival of Dr. John W. Butler, superintendent of missions at the New Orleans, accompanied by twenty missionaries, was welcomed by the conference.

CORE MEMORIAL. A resolution by Dr. E. F. Cooke, secretary, passed Tuesday morning, memorial services in honor of Thomas Cook, first Methodist bishop of Georgia, who died at sea one hundred years ago, with a memorial address by Bishop Chandler, was adopted by the conference.

CHARITABLE RECORD OF CHURCH. Considerable interest was shown by the presentation of a resolution touching the charitable record of the church and its institutions, by Revs. B. H. Chappell and T. D. Ellis, because of the present controversy over the case of the Vanderbilt case.

The resolution, which was adopted, provides for a commission to investigate the laws and regulations of the church, to ascertain whether or not, under the laws of the states in which they are chartered, property held by them is properly secured to the M. E. church.

The commission is empowered to take such steps as will be necessary to protect property over which doubt exists, and if it is found that the laws of the states in which the church is chartered do not properly secure property to the church, to instruct the churches to procure charters in some other state or states in which the church is chartered.

On the roll call for resolution affecting the church discipline, several minor changes were proposed and referred to the proper committee.

CHURCH RELATIONS. The special report on the church relations on church relations, on the proposition to appoint a joint committee of the colored Methodist church in an advisory capacity, which was made an order for today, was taken up by the conference.

After some discussion of the conference concurred in the recommendation of the committee on the church relations to appoint a joint committee of the colored Methodist church in an advisory capacity, which was made an order for today, was taken up by the conference.

INCREASE OF RECEIPTS

SHOWS NEED OF NEW P. O.

Figures Compiled by Postmaster Jones Proves Remarkable Growth of Business

The need of a larger postoffice building in Atlanta is shown conclusively in figures compiled by Postmaster Bolling H. Jones, showing the increase in the receipts of the office since 1905.

In 1905 the receipts were $605,747.57, but for 1914 they were $935,725.90. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, the receipts were $935,725.90.

The operation of the parcel post has also increased the need of larger quarters.

Mr. Jones took charge of the office on September 15, 1912. The executive forces of the office were reorganized under two divisions, one of finance and one of operations.

Under the finance division were taken over the greater facilities by an enlargement of the floor space and installation of mechanical devices for the handling of parcel post packages.

Under the operations division, Mr. Jones shows the growth of business of the Atlanta office. The present building was built in 1895.

The receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, were $935,725.90. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, the receipts were $847,330.13.

The increase of $88,395.77, or 10.43 per cent, shows the growth of business of the Atlanta office. The present building was built in 1895.

pleasantly destroyed; neither ties nor tails were cut, and the telegraph wires have been cut. The last was especially intense and the one woman in the party died before we could do anything for her. She had her head body we waited until daylight for the train that should take us. None of us had either food or drink to stay us as we waited.

When the train, with a detachment of troops aboard, finally came there was a long palaver before we were allowed to board with the woman's body. We proceeded four miles to Tepic, where another Mexican officer burst out and ordered us all to throw up our hands.

We had to file out one by one, between files of soldiers with fixed bayonets, and submit to a painful search. This farce consumed several hours, and when we were allowed to reboard the train proceeded on to Soledad, where the train stopped over night.

In the morning there was no breakfast for us, and at 7 o'clock we took the train for Mexico City, proceeding with satisfactory swiftness until Pasa del Macho was reached, the present headquarters of General Guzmán.

There we found evidences of feverish military activity, many cannon, breast-works, entrenched soldiers and companies of soldiers armed and equipped.

I saw one donkey wearing a mask imitating President Wilson, and an American flag tied to its tail dragging in the mud, and ridden by a Mexican carrying a Mexican flag.

The Zoolo was brilliantly illuminated and surrounded by sparkling fire. The Zoolo was brilliantly illuminated and surrounded by sparkling fire.

Waiting in the midst of these festivities to obtain an interview with Huerta, and falling again at the Antares club, where it is his habit to drink in after midnight, I returned to my hotel near the Plaza Vela, where I encountered a mournful procession of wounded and sick soldiers from San Luis Potosí.

Wednesday morning I saw more marching columns of volunteers, well dressed, young, of good physique and well-armed. They were really quite impressive. I had luncheon with Huerta at the "don cafe," and he was plain and proud of the showing made by the volunteers. Among the five of us at the luncheon table nearly thirty glasses of donkey were consumed.

Nobody paid the bill, and afterward I was told by Albert Christlieb, the principal German liquor importer at Mexico, that Huerta's private liquor bill now exceeds 4,000 pesos, about $800, with no prospect of payment.

Thursday morning at 7 o'clock I went to the station to take a train for Vera Cruz.

At Pasa del Macho we were stopped and searched by soldiers, who took away all our newspapers. We spent the night at Soledad, sleeping under the stars on the stone platform of the railway station. When we awoke I found that somebody had stolen my eyeglasses.

So indignant and breakfastless, we remained at 4 o'clock to be elected at Soledad. From there we walked nine miles under a broiling sun to the Américas end of the line, where a train waited and took us into Vera Cruz. We arrived at 10 o'clock Friday forenoon, mighty glad to be under the bare and stripes once more.

correspondent of the London Express and an English correspondent named Rourke were arrested by Mexican authorities at Mexico City Thursday evening. They had just arrived from Vera Cruz, and the police were waiting with coaches when the train drew into the station.

All were taken to jail under guard and Whiffen and Sutton were held for investigation. The two Englishmen were released, and the officer who arrested them was reprimanded.

Whiffen carried only a hand bag which contained copy of the Mexican Herald. The official who searched the bag remarked: "That kind of English doesn't go here." Sutton carried a camera which was confiscated. He showed a correspondent's credential, signed by Rear Admiral Bagder, but this had no effect.

Huffer went immediately to the Brazilian minister, who notified the British minister Sir Lionel Gordon, and also called on the police to release the Americans. The police replied that action would be taken as soon as the chief of police had investigated the merits of the case.

Rourke, the other British correspondent, returned here, while Huffer remained in Mexico City.

Word reached New York City Saturday night that Walter C. Whiffen, of the Associated Press staff, who was arrested at Mexico City, has been released by the Mexican authorities.

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS REPORTED HELD IN MEXICO

word was received of the departure of the Mexican delegates from Mexico City for the conference. Preparations for dispatching reinforcements to General Funston at Vera Cruz, should such a movement become necessary, went forward steadily, today work on twelve transports to carry troops, horses and supplies being rushed, but no warlike development occurred. The military apparently is being held well in leash to avoid embarrassing the mediation negotiations.

A threatening cloud disappeared from the diplomatic horizon, when the German steamer Kron Prinzessin Cecilie, reported to be carrying arms and ammunition for Huerta returned to Vera Cruz, without debating her war stores at Puerto Mexico, and it was announced that the munitions on this and a second German steamer, the Bavaria, would be returned to Germany.

No announcement regarding the delegates to the conference was made today, but Justice Loomis, of St. Louis, former solicitor general, mentioned as possible delegates conferred with President Wilson.

It was thought the delegates would be named not later than Monday. Secretaries Bryan and Garrison conferred with the President today but declined to discuss military or diplomatic developments.

The war department today completed its preparations for army movements, including the reinforcement of General Funston at Vera Cruz, should necessity arise. Twelve transports were arranged for and men were working night and day to convert the chartered steamships at the points of embarkation, to accommodate soldiers, horses, guns and supplies. Orders to the fourth and sixth brigades at Texas City, the remainder of the second division, to be ready to reinforce General Funston at Vera Cruz were given but Secretary Garrison said that no orders had been issued for their dispatch.

At the navy department, the steamer Oxnark was ordered to Tampico. A report was received today from Rear Admiral Fletcher which was regarded as confirmatory in some degree of news that had reached the war department, several days ago, that oil men were in danger of losing their property in Mexico because of suspension of oil production.

Information concerning the safety of Consul John R. Silliman, reported arrested by Huerta commanders at Saltillo, or San Luis Potosí, was received. The state department received through the sailors and marines for their work at Vera Cruz and the marine band gave a concert.

Atlanta's Suburban Street Car System

THE transportation facilities shown here form one of the principal assets of Atlanta. The system has undoubtedly contributed as much or more than any other factor toward the growth and extension of the city's territory and business. The tracks and equipment are all modern and first class, the rates are as reasonable as any in the United States under similar conditions, and the service satisfactory in every particular.

Suburban Activity in the Radius of the Trolley Lines

WITH ATLANTA EACH A CITY IN ITSELF

A Considerable Portion of the Business Population of Atlanta Proper Lives Within an Hour's Ride of the City. Good Roads and Automobiles Also Contribute to the Startling Development of Suburban Sections

There are four main suburban trolley lines running from Atlanta—one north; one northeast; one east and the fourth south. They connect Brookhaven and part of DeKalb county; Marietta and Cobb county; Stone Mountain and DeKalb county; and College Park and Hapeville and the population in the south end of the county. Because of these lines, a considerable part of the business population of Atlanta proper is enabled to live several miles beyond the corporate limits. The development of car service has resulted in several municipalities within an hour and less time of Atlanta.

On the College Park line, for instance, are College Park, East Point and Hapeville, each of which has its own city government, system of water and sewers, schools, and, in the case of College Park, a woman's college and a military academy.

On the Marietta line are Marietta and various towns and stations along the line, to say nothing of a considerable suburban population not confined to special settlements.

The Stone Mountain line reaches Decatur, Clarkston, Stone Mountain and various stations. Other lines reach Kirkwood, Oak-hurst, East Lake, Lakewood, to say nothing of intervening stations along the line.

A peculiar growth of the length of a car line is shown on Peachtree road. Originally stopping at Brookwood, the line was extended to Brookhead, and later still to Brookhaven.

The next step in interurban car lines will be extensions to places like Gainesville in the north, Macon and the intervening towns to the south, Lithonia and Augusta to the east.

Persons who spend most of their time inside Atlanta are amazed when they take a car line to the suburbs at the tremendous development they find.

Not only have the towns grown in their own limits, but new houses are being built in the open country. The automobile and the development of good roads account in large measure for the growth of country population around Atlanta.

TWO ATLANTA COLLEGES NOT IN CITY AT ALL

Decatur and College Park Stress Their Home and Educational Advantages

It is a startling fact that the only colleges Atlanta has are not in Atlanta at all.

Cox College at College Park, and Agnes Scott at Decatur, are known all through the south. These towns also have the Georgia Military Academy and the Donald Fraser High School, both of which are known beyond this territory.

In fact, Decatur and College Park stress their educational and home advantages. In an age of materialism, it is unusual for emphasis to be put so decidedly on these two qualities.

In the Decatur board of trade booklet, the statement is made that the town has no factories and wants none. It has general business, however, and natural advantages, as have also College Park.

Some of the most attractive homes around Atlanta are on the East Point road at College Park, and of late there has been a great deal of new development in the town, including new residence subdivisions and several new houses occupied by home owners.

Hapeville is another important point which has grown greatly in population and real estate development in the past few years.

MANY INDUSTRIES FIND HOMES IN EAST POINT

Many Additions Are Being Made to Manufacturing Colony Out There

Some of the biggest industrial development in the state is at East Point, less than an hour's ride from Atlanta.

The Atlanta and West Point has plans for a freight depot and is constantly adding new tenants to its great industrial community at that point.

Several fertilizer factories, implement manufacturing and similar concerns occupy large buildings, to say nothing of smaller concerns engaged in a miscellaneous manufacturing business.

East Point also has its water and sewer systems and its real estate development. It was a leading center long before the extension of the trolley line.

GEN. SICKLES IS BURIED IN ARLINGTON CEMETERY

Body Accompanied to Grave by Escort of Cavalry and Field Artillery

WASHINGTON, May 9.—All honors of war were paid the late Major General Daniel B. Sickles, who was buried in Arlington national cemetery today. The body was carried in solemn procession from the Union station here, where it lay in state through the night, to the cemetery accompanied by an escort of cavalry and field artillery. Following the caisson was led the general's riderless horse. As the procession passed through the grounds at Fort Myer, a major general's artillery salute was fired and at the grave three salvos of rifle shots and another artillery salute marked the placing of the body in its last resting place. The Rev. Father J. R. Houlahan, chaplain at Fort Myer, read the funeral service. In addition to the regular army escort a large number of Civil war veterans marched in the procession.

But College Park is only eight miles from Atlanta, with a ten-minute trolley schedule, five-cent fare. So all the advantages of the big city are brought within easy reach of the students.

The home life of Cox College and Conservatory students is very carefully looked after. The dormitories are elegant and comfortable and well cared for by competent matrons. There is a completely equipped modern infirmary, in charge of a capable matron, to look after any illness among the students.

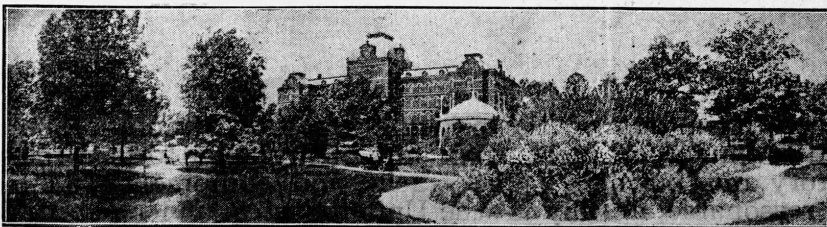

The curriculum of the college is broad and varied, giving the student thorough training in her chosen line. The faculty is composed of men and women of real ability and broad experience. Each member is a college graduate and thoroughly competent. The equipment in the way of reference books, geological specimens, art treasures and chemical apparatus is unusually complete.

The Conservatory Department is one of the finest in the entire country. Musicians of skill and excellent ability are in charge of the various sections. Seventy-six pianos and two pipe organs are kept busy constantly. Besides these, there are many other musical instruments, a large concert hall for the use of students for ensemble playing and singing, for public and private recitals, and for the presentation of visiting artists.

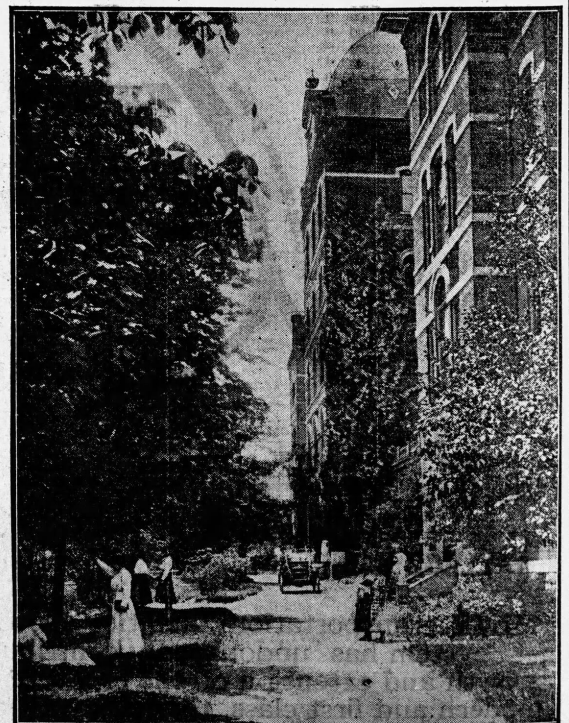

The atmosphere of the college is stimulating to a girl of ambition, and helpful at all points. The influence exerted over her during her years of college life is all for the good and noble and will have telling effect on her future life and character.

Already the roll of Alumnae of Cox College and Conservatory consists of most prominent women of the South. Will you add your daughter's name to it?

American Girl Is Heroine at Vera Cruz

With Rifle in Hand She Stood 18 Hours at Her Home, Momentarily Expecting Death at Hands of Mexicans

BY HARRY G. FARMER.

VERA CRUZ, May 9.—Miss Clara, Cameron, 15-year-old American girl, is the heroine of the hour in Vera Cruz. Everybody, soldiers, sailors, marines, all admit there's more bravery and heroism in Miss Clara than in any big, strong warrior in this city.

She sat on the top stair in her home here for eighteen long hours without sleeping, the only time she was not sleeping every minute that a horde of brutal Mexican ruffians would burst in the door and try to drag her with the retreating Huerta army into a captivity.

By her side during all those sleepless hours, stood her father, saving one last bullet, which would have saved his daughter from Mexican hands, had they been victorious. After midnight, Miss Cameron and her father began their vigil when the first threats of landing U. S. sailors were made. Mexican toughs then started their war on defenseless Americans. Insults and threats were heaped on women and girls.

The Camerons unable to get through the city to the protection of the American warships riding in the harbor, barricaded their doors and windows, took up their rifles and waited with fingers on triggers.

After the bluejackets laded, swarms of Mexican soldiers red past the Cameron home, some of them stopping to loot whenever possible. Rough hands whizzed through their walls. Bullets burst in the air outside. Shouts, curses, groans of dying men and threats to kill or capture the fathers and daughters reached the ears of the two lone watchers on that stairway.

GIRL NOT DAUNTED.

Was the little American girl frightened? She was not! At least she said so when Photographer Durborough saw her in front of the wrecked naval academy. "It was a great experience," she said. "I held a rifle for eighteen hours, sitting at the head of the stairs with dad, and I really wished the Mexicans would invade our home, because it would be giving me a chance to get even for the insults that I was forced to take from bandits at our ranch fifty-seven miles west of here. I could have killed any number of Mexican ruffians without a bit of feeling, because I think they are the most despicable people on the earth. All I have seen have been savage, treacherous creatures without principle, at whose hands American women have suffered too much.

"Before falling into their hands I would have killed myself, but I think they would have killed me themselves, as I would put up the most severe resistance possible—and I can shoot."

MENACED BY BANDITS.

The Camerons are refugees from the interior. For some time Dr. Cameron has maintained a large ranch and had improved his property and helped his Mexican neighbors to progress in stock raising. Then the revolution reached into their territory, and in the guise of rebels, the bandits devastated the plantation and kept them in constant danger, a hazard which was continued by the intervention of the United States. Miss Cameron was educated in Erie, Pa., and at the completion of her school work joined her father in Mexico. She is a bright example of the typical American girl, and Mexicans may well be aware of her accurate aim.

COLLEGE PARK

BEAUTIFUL, HEALTHFUL, CULTURED, PROGRESSIVE, CLEAN--

The Kind of Place You'd Like Your Children To Call "Home"

College Park's long suit is her desirability as a "home" city. She has the location, the physical beauty, the healthfulness, the accessibility, the nearness to a big town like Atlanta, the educational facilities, the social advantages—all the essentials that go to make ideal "home" conditions.

College Park is a beautiful little town—with its broad, well-paved streets shaded by stately oaks and elms; its handsome residences set well back on smooth, velvety lawns; its civic parks and its Great White Way. And it's a clean town, too,—not a factory in the place to scatter soot and dirt and smoke. Nor will there ever be a smoky, dirty manufactory within the corporate limits of the town. College Park means to stay clean.

The school facilities of College Park are really remarkable. There are two grammar schools for the little-tots, a high school for older boys and girls and Cox College and Conservatory for girls and young women and the Georgia Military Academy for boys. These last two are among the best known and most largely attended colleges in the south. You can give your sons and daughters the very finest educational advantages right here in College Park.

From the standpoint of business, College Park is right on to her job. She is wide awake and progressive. She has her own bank and newspaper. She has hustling, successful concerns in every line of commercial endeavor. College Park makes money for her business enterprises.

Why don't you come to College Park?

TELEPHONE COMPANY IS READY TO HANDLE RUSH

Several Hundred Operators Have Been Imported for Work Next Week

The Atlanta exchange of the Southern Bell telephone company is prepared to handle the rush of telephone calls next week in the quickest and most capable manner possible. "We are better fixed for the Shrine convention than we have ever been at any other convention here," says T. R. Gentry, local manager. "We have imported several hundred extra operators from Birmingham, Chattanooga, and other neighboring cities and we have installed a hundred extra pay stations throughout the city. We have also placed men in every local hotel who will look out for all calls." The telephone company has also issued a miniature pocket directory for the Shrine meeting which contains the names of every temple, the address and telephone number of the temples, the names, addresses and telephone numbers of all local hotels, amusement places, public buildings and other places of interest. It is the most complete and will prove invaluable to every visitor and to Atlantians as well.

Senator Wears Iron Ring to Ward Away Rheumatic Attacks

BY RALPH SMITH.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—The old superstition, common many years ago all over the country, that the presence of an iron ring on the finger will dispel rheumatism, has found its way into the United States senate. Senator James P. Clarke, of Arkansas, wears an iron band on the ring finger of his right hand, and bears witness to the fact that "something" has relieved his shoulder and arm of pains that racked them during his recent campaign in Arkansas.

"Of course I do not attribute the relief to the ring, because I am not a superstitious person, but just the same I am not going to discard it," he explained with a smile. "My shoulder and arm have not disturbed me much since I began wearing the ring, and its presence on the finger occasions no inconvenience."

Senator Clarke triumphed in one of the most exciting and closest political fights ever waged in Arkansas. His popular majority was 212 votes. He adopted the iron ring in the midst of the campaign.

"My friends were demanding that I make two or three speeches a day," he said. "The strain was terrific, and I was suffering from rheumatism. Finally I rebelled, and gave as an excuse the pains in my shoulder and arm. I could not make a speech."

"The former auditor of Arkansas, whose term ran contemporaneously with my administration as governor suggested that I wear an iron ring—cost 35 cents—on the hand of the afflicted arm. I heeded the idea, but he insisted, so I gave up the 35 cents."

"A week or ten days later there came to my office a small package by parcel post. I began to unwrap it, and it seemed I would never get to the core. I began to suspect that it was the victim of a practical joke, but after a while the ring fell out."

"I put the ring on this finger (indicating the ring finger of the right hand) and I have had it there ever since. I don't know, but it seemed to me that the arm began to get easy that night. I slept better. It never troubled me seriously any more, and I am still wearing the ring."

"Of course, you know," he smiled, "I don't take stock in such things, but this ring is a fixture just the same."

The Microbe Menace

(May Atlantic.) One who gives you information, in this day of the Sunday newspaper, tells us that the danger of the time is the quiet microbe. We could even say that microbes clanked chains, and then we would know they were not dead and quiet for the prophetic. The invisible death of the microbe, seen in the form of bacteria, has been easily explained by the discovery of bacteria. The microbe, which is the cause of life, living, would be an almost invisible existence. The microbe, which is the cause of life, living, would be an almost invisible existence. GEORGIA PEACH TO HEAD MARKET, COMING SEASON

J. H. Hale, President of Orchard Company, Says Fruit in Fine Condition

J. H. Hale, president of a large orchard company at Fort Valley, a recent visitor at the Georgia Fruit Exchange, says that the Georgia peach, both as to quantity and quality will dominate the market this season.

He bases this statement on observations made on a recent tour of the largest orchards of the state. The orchards are in better condition than ever, he says.

He estimates that the crop will be not far from 70 per cent. of the total yield of 1913. The great bulk of the good orchards run from 50 to 60 per cent. of a crop of Elberta; 85 per cent. of Carmine and a full 100 per cent. of Balls of Georgia and Ruby, according to Mr. Hale.

Fox Hunt on Paris Streets

PARIS.—There is a certain lady who possesses a tame fox which she takes out for walks on the boulevards. The other day I had just passed her; she was sitting on a seat outside the Credit Lyonnais. Suddenly I heard a yapping and shouting. Turning quickly, I caught a glimpse of the fox dodging motorbuses, and scampering along the road like a good un. I gathered myself together and, in spite of a bad leg, I joined the hunt. There was not alone several peroxide ladies raised their skirts to a working height, and urging their Pintos to go after Reynard; they themselves bringing up a by no means inferior rear. All sorts and conditions of motorists were there. On we rushed, asking each other what we were running after. Nobody knew; nobody cared. I slipped on a banana peel, murmured "But, tut," and continued, having lost about four lengths, to chase a fox which was not alone words of encouragement or derision; mostly the latter. Never mind; on we went. I went down; then I was up. Now down again. On we went. More shouts, more yelling. Where's the fox? Down a drain. Oh, yes.

W. J. HARRIS REPLIES TO H. H. DEAN'S CARD

Answers Criticism of Suggestions That Primary Rules Be Changed

Chairman William J. Harris, of the state Democratic executive committee, has issued a reply to H. H. Dean, of Columbus, who several days ago wrote a card criticizing Mr. Harris' suggestion that unless the primary rules were changed by the committee, a deadlock might arise in the state convention which would result in political haggling in the nominations for governor and United States senator.

In part Mr. Harris' reply follows: "Washington, D. C., May 8, 1914. "I read in the papers recently an open letter written by Colonel H. H. Dean of Columbus, Ga., in which he suggested that unless the primary rules were changed by the committee, a deadlock might arise in the state convention which would result in political haggling in the nominations for governor and United States senator."

"The suggestion referred to was made by a member of congress from Georgia, who believes in the county unit rule as the smaller counties, but he likewise favors protecting the people from log-rolling political conventions."

"It has been suggested that if a candidate takes only a few votes of being nominated over all the candidates he should be declared the nominee. The fact that he received a majority of votes over all the candidates in the primary would be a guarantee that he would be able to carry any candidate in the second primary. This rule, if adopted, would save the expense of a second primary. This is merely a suggestion."

"The suggestion referred to was made by a member of congress from Georgia, who believes in the county unit rule as the smaller counties, but he likewise favors protecting the people from log-rolling political conventions."

"Colonel Dean is attorney for the railroads and electric power companies which control the Tallulah Falls property in Clayton and Habersham counties. At the last convention he held a proxy and voted for one of these companies. Objection was made to any proxy being voted. Hon. William C. Wright, the sitting chairman of the state committee, was on the platform and as I was not certain what was customary in such cases, I asked for information before ruling. He told me it had been customary to allow proxies voted, and Colonel Dean accordingly held a proxy, and represented a county in which he did not even live. I understand Colonel Dean has at previous times voted proxies for counties other than the one in which he resides and is not naturally objects to the state committee changing a plan which gives him so much authority belonging to the people."

"In the same convention, several delegates, on the first ballot, tried to vote against the candidate for commissioner of agriculture, for whom they had been instructed by their counties. I ruled that they had no right to vote against their instructions. On the first ballot, I ruled that they had no right to vote against their instructions. On the first ballot, I ruled that they had no right to vote against their instructions."

"In some of the congressional districts of Georgia, the county unit system prevails, but in the event no candidate receives a majority of votes at the convention and a candidate receives a majority of all the votes cast, he is declared the nominee. With this primary, this is the only plan which protects the people from the politician. However, as I have already stated, I do not believe the committee has the authority to change the county unit plan and under this plan a second primary is the only way in which the people of Georgia can name their governor and United States senator, and in my judgment the people are not going to be satisfied unless the committee allows them this right."

ROSWELL BOY ARRESTED ON CHARGE OF FORGERY

Recorder Pro Tem Holds Ralph Thomason Under $1,000 Bond

After a notorious career as a salaried man, during which he turned in about $10,000 worth of orders without cash, Ralph Thomason, a 15-year-old boy who gave Roswell, Ga., as his home, was arrested Saturday morning by Detective Waggoner.

The arrest followed complaint of Thomason's employers, Brown & Yancy, manufacturers' agents, with offices in the Chandler building, who stated that the boy had collected over $1,000 on commissions from them on orders that were forged.

According to the agents' statements, Thomason had been employed by them for some time, and had turned in about $1,000 worth of orders a week. The phenomenal success of the young man made his employers suspicious and they began to watch him. As a result they came to the conclusion that he was forging orders and asked for his arrest.

The case was tried before Recorder Pro Tem Preston Saturday afternoon, where the boy having lost the court case for the day, and Thomason was bound over under a $1,000 bond on the charge of forging and swindling and of larceny.

Famous Play to Be Given in Films All Next Week-Madge Lessing in Leading Role

A genuine moving picture sensation is scheduled for Atlanta in connection with the great Shriners' convention in the announcement that the film version of "The Blue Mouse," an international comedy success, will be presented at the first time in America. It is the first multiple reel comedy ever attempted, the first time in other words, that a "funny" play has been converted into a moving picture. Robert D. Williams, president of Mecca temple, New York, who will be here for the Shrine gathering, recommended the importation of the film to the Apex Picture company, of New York, which has offices here in the Rhodes building. A private display of the pictures will be given Sunday at the Grand for Shriners and members of the press.

The picture is produced here as a result of co-operation between Jake Wells, theatrical manager, and the Apex company. The film will later be presented in a specially constructed moving picture palace erected at a cost of more than a quarter of a million dollars.

The producers declared that the movie version is as funny as the original stage version which made a fortune for Madge Lessing, who is seen in the films to be shown here.

RUBENS EXPECTED BACK TO FACE CONTEMPT CHARGE

Detective May Return Voluntarily If Wife's Condition Will Permit

William J. Burns will likely return to the city voluntarily to face charges of contempt of court, brought against him in the original prosecution by Dan S. Lehon, by Judge Ben H. Hill of superior court.

At the office of his agency here it was stated he is now in New York City at the bedside of Mrs. Burns, who is critically ill. If her condition shows improvement he will probably return.

The law firm of Little, Fowler, Hooper & Goldstein, one member of which Frank Hooper, assisted the solicitor general in the original prosecution, said: "Our purpose in sending the Burns agency to look after its interests, and the firm will represent Burns and Lehon at the contempt hearing on Tuesday."

Burns and Lehon are charged with contempt because of the sending of Annie Maud Carter, a negro witness, out of the state.

Discussing the matter, Mr. Lehon said: "Our purpose in sending the Burns agency to look after its interests, and the firm will represent Burns and Lehon at the contempt hearing on Tuesday."

MOVING PICTURE THEATERS TO REMAIN OPEN TODAY

Mayor Woodward Gives Special Permission for Benefit of Shriners

Atlanta's motion picture theaters will be open today and tonight, thus affording the hundreds of visiting Shriners an opportunity to amuse themselves during the day and evening.

Operating under special permission from Mayor Woodward, the Shriners, Montgomery, Bayou, Bonita, and the Forsyth will be open today between the hours usually observed during the week. No admission will be charged to any of the picture houses, but patrons will be allowed to contribute as they wish.

Without these shows with which to occupy their time, many of the visitors to the city would be without the form of amusement during the day, it is a fact and it was for this reason that Mayor Woodward decided to lift the ban on the Sunday movies for this one day alone.

The SIX That is First in Sales and Value

Let your Studebaker SIX demonstration be a family demonstration.

Test out its luxury, not from the standpoint of one or two, but four, or six, or seven.

Prove to yourself that the comfort of all, combined, is complete—that it leaves nothing to be desired.

Ne do not merely mean complete comfort in the matter of space and room.

We mean the impossibility of finding a car at any price which renders motoring so restful to mind and body.

We mean that quality of clinging to the road, while skimming over it, which is an expression of the perfect distribution of weight in an essentially light car.

We mean that absence of noise, and struggle, and strain, in the motor, which proves its perfect balance—that nice co-ordination which enables the engine to pick up speed without imparting a particle of tremor or vibration to the car.

We mean the freedom from swinging and swaying—the steady, straight-on sensation—the sense of inexhaustible power,—the "give" and accommodation of springs to every road variation.

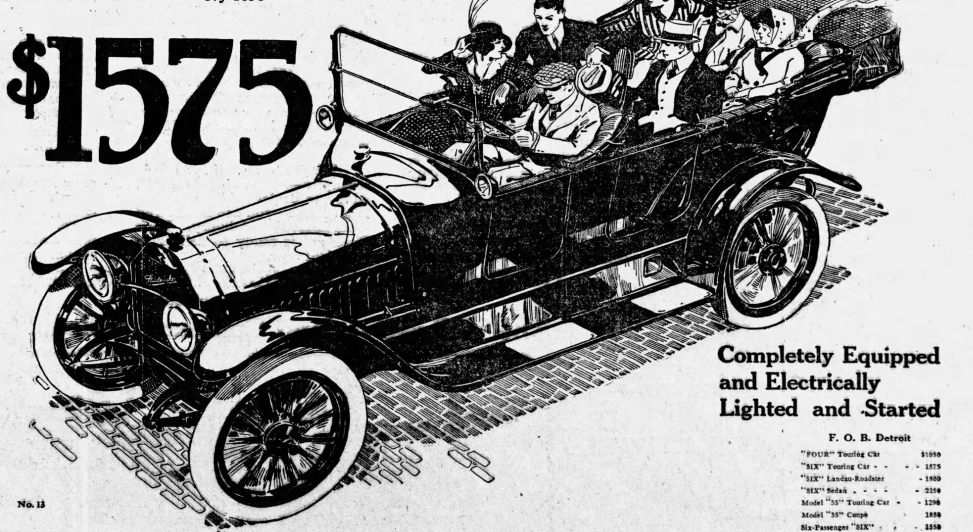

We mean a dozen different evidences of scientific design and scientific manufacturing—all of which combined lull the nerves into complete relaxation and comfort.

A family demonstration in the Studebaker SIX means a united family choice.

WELCOME TO SAVANNAH

HA LEE TEMPLE AWAITS YOU

SAVANNAH BOARD OF TRADE

SAVANNAH, GEORGIA, Chatham County

GORDON MONUMENT, WRIGHT SQUARE, SAVANNAH.

SAVANNAH has a population of 85,000.

The National Government has recognized, in a very signal way, the supreme commercial importance of the port of Savannah, in that it has expended approximately $12,000,000 on the improvement of the Savannah River and Harbor. The Government statistics reveal the fact that the commerce of Savannah is greater than that of the combined ports between Baltimore and Mobile, and enjoys the greatest percentage of growth in commerce generally.

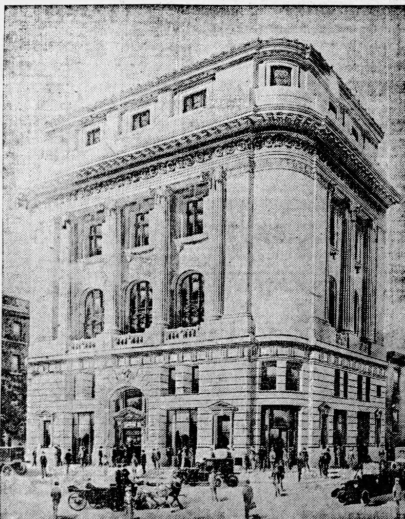

SAVANNAH is the largest naval stores port in the world. Prices on naval stores—that is, Rosin and Turpentine—for the entire world are made at Savannah.

SAVANNAH is the second largest cotton port in the United States.

SAVANNAH ranks second in foreign exports of domestic merchandise on the Atlantic Coast and is exceeded only by New York. Savannah ranks fourth in foreign exports of domestic merchandise for the entire United States.

SAVANNAH manufactures more fertilizer than any other one point in the world.

One of the largest cotton oil plants in the United States is located at Savannah.

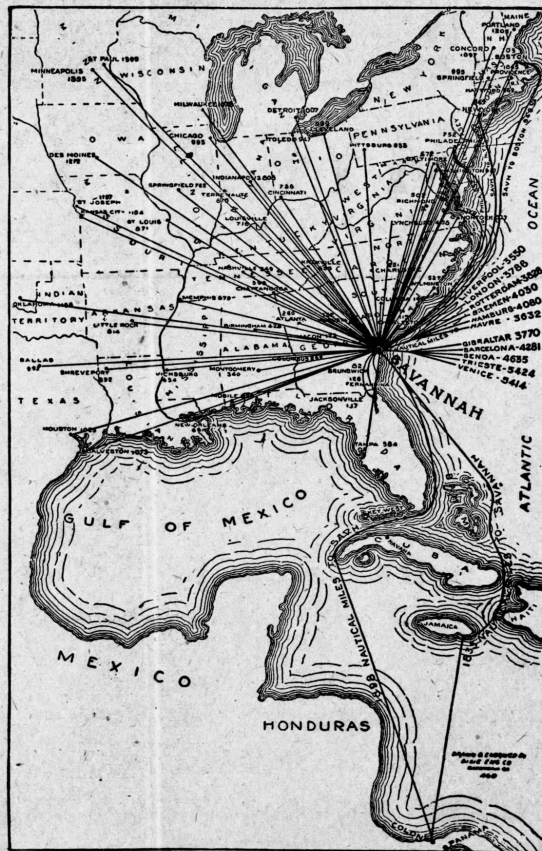

MASONIC TEMPLE, SAVANNAH.

SAVANNAH purchases annually over $250,000,000 in domestic and foreign exchange. Savannah bank clearances annually are estimated at over $900,000,000.

SAVANNAH, combining as it does the railway facilities to attract the agricultural products and manufactures of the Middle West and the South-east, and the water facilities with which to distribute these products throughout the entire world is unquestionably the logical port for the locating of distributing houses and manufactories; and the increased number of manufacturing plants at Savannah during the past ten years have exceeded by far the expectations of the most sanguine.

SAVANNAH is the largest and most important port of the South Atlantic, through which passes annually foreign and domestic commerce aggregating $350,000,000.

Four great trunk lines enter Savannah, with a mileage of over 18,000 miles. The terminals at Savannah cover over 3,500 acres. Every wharf is connected with the four trunk lines of railroads. Coastwise steamship lines connect Savannah regularly with New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Jacksonville. These steamers average three trips each week, with a corresponding service from the ports named to Savannah.

SAVANNAH ships to the interior banks of this section $7,000,000 to $8,000,000 annually in currency, for the moving of crops to the ports, without charge for services. Savannah banks refrain from any speculative schemes, thereby enabling them to advance more money to the naval stores, cotton and lumber industries and country merchants and banks, than any other city of the producing section of the South Atlantic States. In other words, most of the money is used strictly in developing the agricultural needs of this territory and legitimate mercantile enterprises.

SAVANNAH receives cotton not only from this section but as far west as Texas, Arkansas and other Western states.

(Advt.)

CITY HALL, SAVANNAH.

SAVANNAH has over 150 miles of the finest automobile roads in this country, which have been made famous by the greatest automobile events that have ever been held.

SAVANNAH has ten summer resorts located on the salt water, within 20 to 40 minutes' ride from the residential section of the city. The territory immediately adjacent to Savannah affords the finest fishing and hunting grounds in the South. The Golf Links at Savannah are known to be the most beautiful and picturesque in the world.

SAVANNAH offers all of the advantages to be found in a city of 200,000 population in educational facilities, recreation, etc.

In the matter of health, the official report proves it to be the most healthful city on the South Atlantic. Only the purest artesian water from wells 500 to 1,000 feet deep is used.

SAVANNAH, due to her geographical position and unsurpassed terminal facilities and freedom from ice and snow which, during the winter months, are the greatest hindrances to quick despatch at most Northern ports; Savannah, combining as she does the railroad facilities with which to draw to it the agricultural products and manufactures of the Middle West and the South; Savannah, with her magnificent fleet of coastwise steamships, and with her direct freight steamships plying between the ports of the United Kingdom, the Continent of Europe, Latin America and the Orient; SAVANNAH, with these advantages, has outstripped all the ports of the Atlantic Coast except New York in exports. The value of exports (foreign only) exceed $100,000,000 annually.

POULTRY, PIGEONS AND LIVE STOCK

The Breeding of Pigeons

There is probably more interest in pigeons over here than ever was known before, and it is surprising to know how many people are engaged in this industry. It is something a lady can easily do, and a number of boys in Georgia are engaged in this line now. It has done much to enter into their lives, and otherwise they would be off into mischief, and then thrown away. There are two little boys that I know of in this state that are making out a nice thing out of their pigeons. One of them sold probably $200 worth of pigeons last year, and the other one has a revenue that has brought him in more than $15 several months ago for the sale of squabs for market purposes alone. Of course these boys have had some experience and understand how to feed and care for their birds and have a valuable set of breeding birds to start with.

The main thing to have in a good house, with a convenient fly attached to it where the pigeons can have plenty sun, the house can be kept clean, the birds fed and watered, also handled easily and conveniently. They room from their master and become very tame. They will do much better by handling them with kindness than if frightened and strangers allowed to go among them.

It is surprising how many pairs of squabs a good pair of breeding birds will raise during a year. On the other hand a lot of birds that are mated and kept in a pen will not be worth while and cost no money. It is best to see that every pair of birds are mated before they are turned loose in a fly. If they will prove almost worthless. This is where many people make a mistake, in by allowing a lot of odd birds in their breeding pens.

The demand for squabs at all the hotels and restaurants will always be good, and fat squabs that weigh fifteen pounds to the dozen will usually bring $4.50 to $6 per dozen at any of the first-class hotels and restaurants. The small ornate pigeons that are sold for $1.00 per dozen usually sell at 20c and 30c each. They even pay well, but it costs only a trifle more to start with, and it takes very little to double the profit at the end of the year.

Two pairs of birds can easily be kept in a room 10 feet by 10 feet, with a fly on the outside of the house. They should be provided with plenty fresh water to drink, also a large tin basin to bathe in. They should have red cross health given a mistake, in by allowing a lot of odd birds in their breeding pens.

They should be fed on regular pigeon feed, which is composed of wheat, cracked corn, hemp seed, Rye, and a little of the most nutritious to pigeons and most of the chicken feed that is sold have more or less oats and barley in them and these are killed by feeding oats and barley to the pigeons. It keeps the intestines irritated and is not good for them. They should be fed a day just what they need, and no more. This is by allowing a lot of odd birds in their breeding pens.

Above all things pigeons should be kept in a dry place where they can get plenty sunlight. Pigeons that are kept in a dark place will not be profitable. They will supply squabs for the average family, and can be kept on any premises in the city with a very small amount of care and attention. And, as they raise their own young many people are not able to keep pigeons in Atlanta who are extensively engaged in breeding squabs for market, and visit to them often to see how they do. This is a very successful way to handle a flock.

Yours very truly,

G. J. B. B.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

E S SELAMU ALEIKUM! Banners fluttering gaily in the breeze, red and green and orange, pennants emblazoned with the glittering insignia of the Mystic Shrine, office buildings shrouded in colored bunting, all herald the approach of the long expected week and the readiness of Atlanta for her high carnival! Vari-colored electric lights strung like so many chains of sparkling jewels, and arched high across the streets, greens and stars ablaze with light, all combine to change night into day. In the marvelous array of color, the whole city seems transformed into the semblance of an oriental fairy tale or into a facsimile of one of the far-famed Arabian nights. Every-where preparations have been completed for a gala week, and the visitors arriving from every point of the globe will be met with a royal greeting which in itself will express the very essence of southern hospitality. Open house will be kept at all the clubs, and a series of beautiful entertainments will be tendered the wives and daughters who will accompany the distinguished visitors; and for the next few days the brilliant festive round will fill every available moment.

The Daughters of the American Revolution have thrown open their chapter house in welcome to the visiting ladies many of whom are distinguished members of the organization. Committees of the members have been appointed to greet the visitors and to add in every way possible to the pleasure of their stay in the city. Es Selamu Aleikum!

ANNUAL ELECTION OF OFFICERS AT WOMAN'S CLUB ON MONDAY

There will be a very interesting meeting of the Atlanta Woman's club on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the club rooms on Baker street. The annual election of officers will be held during the afternoon.

Immediately after the election the meeting will be turned over to Mrs. Fred Hodgson, the president of the Free Kindergarten association. Mrs. Hodgson has prepared a most attractive program for the occasion, and she extends an invitation to all club members and all kindergarten teachers and those interested in the subject to be present.

The following program will be presented:
Song by Mrs. W. C. Jarnagin.
Address—Mrs. Fred G. Hodgson.
Recitation by Mrs. R. H. Blackburn.
Address—Mrs. T. T. Waring.

The club members will have the pleasure of hearing Miss Bell for the first time in a public appearance since her winter of hard work under the best musical professors in New York. Miss Bell's voice has been compared to that of Madame Homer.
The year's work of all the kindergartens in Atlanta has been particularly satisfactory and it will be interesting to hear what has been accomplished through the faithful efforts of the teachers and patrons.

An address on current events will close the program. The meeting will be followed by the informal social hour, which always proves one of the most delightful features of the meeting and assembles a large number of the membership.

You Are Welcome
"Es Selamu Aleikum"
(Peace be with you)

THE Shriner's are the playground of masonry. Though no formal part of Masonry, none but a high degree Mason can become a Shriner. This qualification accounts for the unusually high type of manhood in the order.

Though originating in Ancient Turkey, the Shriner's—as we know them—were introduced into America scarcely forty years ago. The picturesque Oriental symbolism had something to do with establishing the order but the Shriner's have flourished chiefly because real men like to meet occasionally for a bit of clean fun.

The Shriner's have "pulled off many clever stunts," elsewhere, we gladly turn Atlanta over to them to do with as they like.

In only one thing are we not agreed—the Shriner Salutation of "Es Selamu Aleikum." (Peace be with you.) Atlanta has raised $71,000 to entertain the Shriner's—with so much money to spend who in the HOT Sands wants peace.

This Is "On the Shriner's"

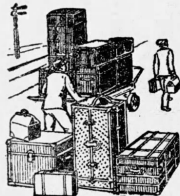

Every Atlantan is familiar with our Star & Crescent emblem that we featured long before the Shriner's similar emblem was thought of in Atlanta. There is some reason, then, for this remark from a well known local writer:

"My Rich's must spend a tremendous amount of money in advertising. Just see how they have posted up their Star & Crescent trade mark all over this town."

Rich's Has Grown With Atlanta.

—It has been identified with Atlanta from the dark after-war days right down to the glorious present.

—The store has grown because it served.

—Too many stores fail for the same reason that a child assigned for falling out of bed—because she went to sleep too near the place where she got in.

—This store never went to sleep where it got into business. On the contrary it has been very much awake, getting further away from the business methods that prevailed 47 years ago.

—At that time there was no one price system; no exchange of goods; no store to safeguard the rights of the customer. Salespeople went to work at 6:30 in the morning, to stay on duty until 9 p. m.

—We are proud to have helped change these dark conditions to the enlightened methods of today where mutualty rules; where quality, service and satisfaction are the natural complement of each purchase.

—Like Atlanta, we have grown since 47 years ago. In celebration of this growth we are—

A Great Event Monday in the Salons of Women's Dress at Davison-Paxon-Stokes Company

Six Hundred Wonderful New Dresses in the Most Remarkable Sale of the Season

A Sale That Will Take Atlanta Women by Storm

In all the papers today there is no more vital or welcome news than this. Think of it, six hundred superb, new dresses—just being unpacked and made ready for display. But—we forgot something. The Prices. We were so engaged in thinking of the beauty and freshness and charm of these dresses—we were about to overlook a very important feature. The pricing is wonderful!!

Dresses of Fashionable Cotton Fabrics

$20 Dresses at $10.95

$25 Dresses at $15.00

Dresses of Latest Silk Fabrics

$25 Dresses at $12.75

$35 Dresses at $20.00

To find at the last moment—when an occasion for dress has arisen suddenly—that one's wardrobe does not contain just the proper gown or costume, is truly the test of one's serenity.

You cannot afford to walk very far into next week without providing new and correct apparel for various occasions that will arise during the Shrine Convention. That is, if you keep abreast of the times.

True, your personality can rise above your clothes, but why should it have to?

Fine clothes belong by right to women of personality, and other women cannot be without them.

Nor need they when such lovely dresses as these are to be had at such prices.

BUT, ABOUT THE DRESSES THEMSELVES

At $10.95 and $15

At $12.75 and $20

Beautiful Dresses of fashionable cotton fabrics—crepe weaves of various kinds—plain colors, charming pinks, greens, blues, yellows, rose, lavender, cream and others; then there are figured crepes, and white ground crepes with colored embroidered figures; some are in three-piece style—for instance, one dress of lovely corded white crepe has smart little coat of rose-colored crepe (price $10.95). Others have blouse of embroidered crepe with skirt of plain; there are scores of other styles equally au fait. The trimmings are an especially pleasing feature. There are pretty collars of sheer, embroidered batiste, or organdie—vests of fine batiste with wee pin tucks.

Charming dresses—for dancing, for teas, for informal dinners, for the hundred-and-one functions of the coming week.

Every one fresh, immaculate—just being shown for the first time.

The loveliest Silk Dresses—every one brand-new, just in stock—and regular $25 to $40 Dresses—which is another way of saying they will not remain in stock longer than they can be seen and claimed. Of fine, beautiful silks—crepes meteor and crepes de chine. So many kinds that to tell you of them all is impossible—but we invite you to see them Monday and get your share. Every fashionable color, and the most fascinating of new styles to select from.

A Word of Advice—All of these dresses will go out rapidly because this is a rare event, of most extraordinary pricing.

OUR

WEEK-END MAY 11, 1914.

Astrologers interpret the rule of the stars as not fortunate today, and for this reason it is advisable to conduct all affairs with care. Mercury and Uranus are mildly adverse.

The configuration promises defeat for well-laid plans. Writers are subject to a bad influence, which prevents concentration of thought and dulls the imaginative faculties. All members of the family should be on their guard.

Conditions are conducive to the practice of fraud. The launching of a swindle of far-reaching effect is prognosticated.

Mexico is under the sway of planetary forces, which will bring many nations together, a London seer announces.

Activity for the army and navy is still read in the aspects of the planets. Warlike demonstrations in the far east again are foreshadowed.

Autumn will bring much sickness, it is predicted. Notable pestilence in this country and Europe will be afflicted with disease. Hospitals will be crowded, according to the prophecies of the astrologers.

There is a sinister sign for South Africa, since Saturn enters Cancer, its ruling sign, in the end of the month.

Care of the young during the summer months is enjoined, as there is an evil omen for the younger generation, and great mortality among children is intimated.

Members of the legislature in various states are forewarned of strenuous sessions. Overwork and much anxiety for the foretold.

Labor is subject to disorganizing influences. The planets indicate dissensions and serious difficulties among leaders.

Unsettled and stormy weather is forecast, owing to the position of Mars, which indicates late floods.

Education has the promise of extraordinary influences for reform. Teachers will benefit.

Visits of distinguished persons who come to the United States are under a happy augury, but dramatic episodes are foreshadowed.

Persons whose birthdate it is should safeguard business and watch for losses. Illness in the family is to be expected, and care of the health will ward off threatened diseases.

Children born on this day are likely to be endowed with the most extraordinary talents. They will be attractive and in danger of having too many love affairs. They should avoid wasting time in pleasure and amusement.

Famous Prayers in New Photoplays

Maude Adams and Other Stars to Be Seen in Motion Pictures

Season of High Class Motion Picture Plays Opens With Success at Montgomery Theater—Many Fine Attractions Booked

Of much interest not only to regular patrons of the moving picture theaters, but also to thousands who seldom see the film plays, is the announcement that the Famous Players Film company has made arrangements to present its superb productions in Atlanta.

This is, indeed, good news to discriminating lovers of the drama who have been awaiting the recent ending of the regular theatrical season, for they will now be enabled to see during the summer many of the most famous plays of the world.

The plays to be presented cover a wide range of titles and every one has been produced with marked success in the leading theaters of New York and other cities.

MONTGOMERY THEATER TO PRESENT THREE FAMOUS PLAYERS

To the Montgomery Theater has fallen the good fortune of securing the exclusive rights to the presentation of these wonderful photoplays in Atlanta and the first one, "Fess of the Storm Country," was presented to large and appreciative audiences last week. At several performances the "Standing Room Only" sign was in evidence.

Another great play is to be presented this week, Wednesday and Thursday, May 13 and 14, introducing to Atlanta audiences the distinguished American actor, William Farnum, in "The Redemption of David Corson."

THE REDEMPTION OF DAVID CORSON

DAVID CORSON, Quaker, recluse and mythic, possessed of strong spiritual powers, walked with God and lived in an ethereal world of purity and sanctity. Guided by heavenly visions, with a power of logic and a beauty of voice and manner capable of swaying the emotions and passions of men, David was a mighty force in the quiet little Quaker community in which he had spent all his life. Then the woman came—and Satan came too—and David heard the distant voices of the world calling his youth and his idle energies. In a moment of extreme test, he threw his wonderful faith aside, like a discarded garment, and entered the great world that beckoned to him.

Dr. Paracelsus was a traveling quack—a faker. In his wanderings he had found Pepeta, a magnetic Spanish beauty, whom a band of Gypsies had stolen as a baby. Paracelsus had bought Pepeta from the Gypsies, taking her with him as his wife; and Pepeta was a woman who came into David's quiet life, changing all the course of his destiny.

Passing through David's town, Dr. Paracelsus heard of the young Quaker's wonderful oratorical gifts, and at once realized his value in the selling of false medicines. The crafty and cunning doctor, with fabulous promises of wealth and pleasure, but, meantime, Pepeta and a gambler, and descended into the degradation. The gentle Pepeta, who had watched his degeneration with a breaking heart, could no longer tolerate him, and she left. In his desperate weakness, seeing the woman for whom he had risked his soul drift from him, and about to sink into the abyss of sin and shame, with the waters of oblivion ready to engulf him—it was then that he met the doctor, blind, old and weak, and living only for vengeance. The sight of the doctor was the turning point in David's downward career; it restored his moral balance; it offered a chance for expiation and restitution. He told the doctor who he was, and with a wild cry, he thrust his hand into the doctor's breast, and tore out the heart that had been the cause of his ruin.

David's escape from the pursuing Succubus served him to a final and sublime rally, and guided by the Divine light, he found the harbor of peace, a storm-tossed soul, but with the motion picture spirit in command. He sought Pepeta, and she, purified and reformed, found in the woman he sought to destroy a strong spiritual ally and an instructor.

This will be followed by Malcolm Williams in "The Brute."

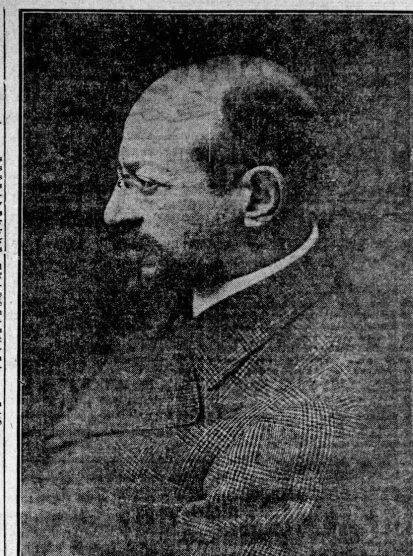

MAUDE ADAMS TO APPEAR IN "PETER PAN"

One of the very greatest triumphs scored by motion picture producers is the arrangement by which the Famous Players Film Co. will soon present Miss Maude Adams in a beautiful and flawless rendition of Barrie's exquisite fairy fantasy, "Peter Pan." The enormous expense of securing Miss Adams for photoplay productions has been a great obstacle, but the difficulty in gaining her consent to pose for motion pictures under any consideration.

Finally, however, she was influenced by the plea that so many thousands of her admirers could enjoy her in the pictures who would be denied the pleasure of seeing her on the stage. Thus she agreed to pose for the Famous Players Film Co. the exclusive privilege of presenting her to the great photoplay audiences of the world. Assurance is given that the productions will be faithful portrayals of Miss Adams and her own company in manner befitting this world-beloved star.

As managing director, Mr. Daniel Frohman, the famous theatrical producer, is crowning a successful career with his superb presentations of these photoplays. He early realized the dramatic and artistic possibilities of motion pictures, and his wonderful power of perception and an incredible measure of dramatic instinct is accomplishing magnificent results in the uplift and development of the film drama.

THE PRESIDENT IS ADOLPH ZUKOR.

When Adolph Zukor, the founder and president of the Famous Players Film company conceived the idea of presenting the great stage celebrities in motion pictures his underlying purpose was to bestow upon posterity the opportunity of seeing the famous stars of today after they have passed into memory. In the realization of this worthy ambition his own immortality is assured.

Mr. Zukor is striving with all the vigor of an energetic enthusiast for the fullest advancement of the motion picture industry, which are shown only in the finest motion picture houses of the country, including the army of New York owned by Marcus Loeb, the world-renowned theatrical magnate.

established in Atlanta headquarters for eight southern states.

Completely equipped office have been opened in the Ribault building and will be under the capable management of Mr. C. W. Savin, assisted by a corps of experienced motion picture people.

He is widely known and very popular in the motion picture field and his many southern friends extend a cordial welcome upon his return to Atlanta.

THE MONTGOMERY IDEAL THEATER FOR PRESENTING THESE PICTURES.

The unsurpassed mechanical equipment of the Montgomery Theater is a guarantee that the productions of the Famous Players Film company will be presented in a manner worthy of their high character, and the luxurious comfort and elegant tone of the house assures the unalloyed pleasure of its patrons.

Mr. Ralph DeBrule, the enterprising manager, is to be congratulated upon securing for Atlanta these remarkable productions which are shown only in the finest motion picture houses of the country, including the army of New York owned by Marcus Loeb, the world-renowned theatrical magnate.

and David had looked into each other's eyes—and so David consented to go with the doctor.

Gradually, the love between David and Pepeta ended human bonds, escaped beyond their control, and they followed the trail of the serpent. David urged her to flee with him, and the woman hesitated and went with him to the distant parts of the world.

OTHER FACTOR IN THIS REGENERATION.

DAVID CORSON'S REDEMPTION.

Following these successful productions, other famous players will be seen at weekly intervals in their most popular successes.

The famous modern fairy play, "A Good Little Devil," will be presented by David Belasco's original all-star cast, including Miss Mary Pickford, in role which won fame for her on the stage as well as in the pictures.

FAMOUS PLAYERS FILM CO. All these features will be seen in Atlanta at the Montgomery Theater.

Among the notable successes scored by this concern during the past year so may be noted the presentation of Miss Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth," Mrs. Fiske in "Tess of the d'Urbervilles," Henry E. Dixey in "Chelsea 7126," Little Langtry in "His Neighbor's Wife," James O'Neill in "The Count of Monte Cristo," Carlotta Nelson in "Leah Kinsch," Cecile Loftus in "A Lady of Quality," and James K. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda."

These are among the greatest in the dramatic history, and others of equal prominence will be included in the future.

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH ADVISES WAR ON FLIES

Issues Circular on Value of Screens and Destroying of Breeding Places

That smiting the fly, while important, is not nearly so effective as properly screening one's house and destroy. In possible breeding places of flies is shown in a bulletin just issued by the state board of health.

Dr. Emory R. Park, who prepared the bulletin, shows in it that because of the rapidity with which flies multiply if allowed good breeding places, it is impossible to hope to keep them off as fast as they come. Therefore, he points out the one successful way to fight them is to destroy their breeding places, to kill those who come to the house and to kill those who get in the house.

In part, the bulletin reads as follows: "Don't put a screen door on the front and back end of the hall, and let 'em go that, as so many people are doing. For if the flies find they can get in through the door, they will go around to the window. If you feel that you can't afford to screen a part of your house, even all the doors and all of the windows of the dining room, kitchen and pantry, and let the flies go. Even this will not keep all the flies out, for some will get in while the door is open and some will come through the cracks that get in."

To materially lessen the total number of these insects, their breeding places must be destroyed, or screened so as to protect them from flies. When they breed in filth, and if all the filth is destroyed or screened, the flies will be destroyed. But it must be remembered that the flies must be promptly destroyed or screened, and not allowed to accumulate or remain unprotected for even a few days, for fly eggs hatch in ten days from the day they are laid.

For destroying the breeding places and for swarming flies now is the best time—rather the most acceptable time. For the few flies that are now hanging around now in warm rooms are very ones who will be the parents to the millions we will have this summer unless these are killed before they come upon us. It is comparatively easy to swat these few—it is impossible to swat the millions of these flies which inevitably be the ancestors to the millions we will have this summer.

Catarth is Often Deep Seated

Local Congestions May Indicate Much Internal Inflammation.

But because catarth affects the nose and throat, few people realize how deep-seated it may be until it creeps into the bronchial tubes and settles down into the lungs. The way to treat catarth is to recognize it by the signs it gives.

And there is only one blood purifier that can be relied upon to get rid of it. It is a powerful, most searching, the most penetrating of all blood purifiers. It is not a mineral, but a vegetable remedy. The medicinal compound is made of a relatively few as essential to well-being health as the nutritive properties of the brain, heart, lungs and liver of food.

Any local irritating influence in the blood is quickly by the blood and eliminated by reason of the stimulating influence of the blood.

Shriners Offered Fine Theatrical Week

EUGENE STEWART WITH LUCILLE LAVERNE CO.-LYRIC

"Are You a Mason?" With Shriners' Hits, by Lucille LaVerne Company, at Lyric, Forsyth Features Nat Willis, Grand Gives "Blue Mouse" in Pictures-Good Bijou Bill

A week of exceptional variety will be offered home folk and visitors during the Shrine convention, and the man who lives of parading or watching parades will have no lack of amusement.

At the Lyric the Lucille LaVerne company, which has played for several successful weeks, will give a special Shrine play "turn 'em away," a Keith vaudeville bill will be headed by Nat Willis, at the Grand "The Blue Mouse" will be shown in pictures.

"ARE YOU A MASON?" With Shriners' Hits, by Lucille LaVerne Company, at Lyric, Forsyth Features Nat Willis, Grand Gives "Blue Mouse" in Pictures-Good Bijou Bill

When Miss Lucille LaVerne, who leads the stock company bearing her name, began to plan for this week at the Lyric, she discussed with Manager Mott everything in their repertoire, from comedy drama to Ibsen. And she thought they considered a lot, they came back finally to "Are You a Mason?" as the very best play to put over in Shrine week, when everybody wants to laugh and doesn't care a hang for uplift or agony.

And "Are You a Mason" is built simply that make laughs. It is as full of them as the renowned "Charley Aunt," and for several decades. It should make an appeal to the Shriners, too, for it's all about a man who pretended to join the Masons, learn made up a set of new words and parading signs, and fooled his wife—for a while.

ties that will add to the attractiveness of the act.

Alexander and Scott, the minstrel stars, whose career with Honey Boy Evans' minstrels, sent them to vaudeville, will be another one of the features of Shrine week.

Two well known, a girl and a boy, this team will sing songs especially written for them, and exhibit the latest ideas of correct male and female. Alexander is considered to be one of the cleverest female impersonators in the profession.

Poster Ball and Ford West in a character study entitled, "Since the Days of '61," promises a splendid novelty. Mr. Hall impersonates a veteran of the Civil War holding conversation with a young man of modern ideas, and with humor and pathos, this act is going to be one of the features of the week.

Joseph Cole and Gertrude Donahy, direct from San Francisco where they are great favorites as society dancers, will offer the newest ideas in advanced dancing, and The Three Melvins, aerial sensationists, will be another feature.

The advance sale for Shrine week closes any record in the past history of the busy theater. Numbers of theater parties have been arranged, and blocks of seats have already been disposed of. The demand is so great that the management has issued the warning for all reservation holders to claim their seats immediately.

POPULAR OPERA IS BIJOU'S BEST BILL

Musical comedy of the up-to-date sort, with lots of popular music thrown in, is the attractive offering announced for the coming week at the Bijou. Thousands of requests have come to the Bijou management for a season of musical shows, and in compliance with these requests, the management has secured the services of the Olympia Opera company, headed by one of America's most versatile comedians, Leo Addie.

To those familiar with things theatrical it will be recalled that "The Blue Mouse" was adapted for the American stage by Clyde Fitch and played on Broadway with great success by the late Mabel Harrison. It was proclaimed one of the funniest farces ever produced and the photo-play version is said to be equally entertaining. It has the reputation of scoring big in all the large European cities having played for over 200 nights in both Paris and Berlin. The following comment from a New York daily will give one an idea of its success in this country: "It is small praise to say of this production that it is the first legitimate comedy in multiple reels, and as it is entirely successful we must score another victory for the screen as a medium of expression. No severer test could be asked than a long comedy. A medium which will scatter the laughs for an hour and a half without one spoken word needs no further certification of dramatic power."

The Grand management announces continuous performances daily this week from noon until midnight. In the afternoon all seats will be 10 cents and at night 10 and 15 cents will be charged. Less than one-half the prices charged the film in New York and elsewhere.

As a basis and bringing it up-to-date with popular musical numbers and clever vaudeville acts, insures a performance that will doubtless make a big hit in Atlanta, duplicating the wonderful success that these musical shows have made in other cities.

Crackers Beat
Barons As Kerin
Chased Kircher

Dent Hurler Smithmen to 6 to 4 Victory Over Curly Brown, Umpire Kerin Cut Short Kircher's Coaching Stunts. Crowd Hissed Him

BY IRVING BROWN.

The Crackers drew a new deck and a clean deal at Ponce de Leon Saturday afternoon, and won a ball game. The Birmingham Barons were the opposition, and the local guardsmen came home winner in a 5 to 4 finish. Shaking the dirt that has pursued them for several days, the Smithites hoped on to the new arrivals, and hammered out a lead in the early stages of the game, but the visitors were never able to overcome.

The game itself was a rather slow affair, and to be perfectly plain, any qualification as to the slowness might well be removed. It was slow. However, there were several features, though they did not partake strictly of the game itself. In the first place there was the flag raising stunt. As per schedule, B. Smith and associates introduced C. Midsworth and pole to line up with them just in front of the plate for the pilgrimage to the pole, standing beyond center field. Preceded by a brass band, the array advanced, and after reaching said pole, formed in a kind of a half-circle, while Manager William gave a cord a rank, and the bunting was hauled into place, and a host of cheering from a good crowd that turned out to observe the ceremonies.

OUTSIDE FEATURES. Then again there was another special feature provided and produced by a Mr. Kerin, a party all clad in blue, and known to be under the direct employment of Senator William Kavanaugh, of Little Rock. Kerin came to the city for the capacity of an umpire, and drew as his assignment the job of arbitrating for the day. That is to say, Kerin was stationed behind the plate, where he judged balls and strikes, and also had general supervision over the game.

Kerin pulled much the same stuff as the average umpire; got by well with the fans on some points, and poorly on others, until along about the middle of the game, when he spotted George Kircher down on the third base line, doing a bit of coaching in a manner all peculiar to himself. After ordering Friend Kircher a second time, Kerin, however, lifted his hand, and started a short arm jab, partaking as well of the nature of a rhythmic motion having its ending in the top of its sweep somewhere above Kircher's shoulder. Kircher failed to get the proper gesture, or at least pretended that he did. Then Kerin shifted his vocal apparatus into a roar with a speech that meant to the bench for George.

Kircher protested his innocence of any misconduct, and he was joined from the field by Captain Welchman and Manager Smith. But Kerin insisted no debate, and Kircher was benched. But as the crowd caught the meaning of the umpire's contention, a loud roar arose. He was hooted, booed and generally maligned in all the language most common to fandom. But this outside rebuttal had no effect on the arbiter's decision, and it was the hatch for George.

OTHER TOP PLAYS. Just why Kerin saw fit to chase Kircher is a matter of some interest. The player was pulling off a number of his funny stunts, which included a pantomime of a man driving a motor car, a bit of tight rope walking, as well as what appeared to be a take off on some eminent biologist chasing a rare species of butterfly. Kircher was making no special attempt to rattle the opposing hurler, nor yet to interfere in any way with the opposing players. Furthermore he was furnishing a bit of amusement in a game of ball that was being allowed to drag much after the fashion of a rheumatic rap to hurry things along.

We doubt Kerin had some reason which he considered sufficient for chasing Kircher, but he failed to divulge it to Manager Smith, further than to say that such antics were not permitted. The information that other umpires who had worked in games with the Crackers raised no objections to these stunts had no weight with him. Doubtless he reserved to himself quite a bit of consolation in having lost dignity to the game, but he had a bit of real entertainment for the spectators. Whether they disapproved might have been judged from the loud hurrahs of real delight when a foul ball struck Kerin as he took a throw from the pitcher.

OTHER DETAILS. But to get back to the game, the Crackers began operations as soon as their inning came along. Amby McNeill first up, was grazed by one of Curly Brown's shots, and was out. The final pitch, which was to be thrown on Welchman's out. Tommy Leung walked and the two pulled a double steal. Flanagan struck out and Long scored. Elbel beat out an infield hit to Elum, and when Elum's throw dropped the throw, Flanagan scored.

In the next inning, Dunn slammed a double to right, and scored on Jennings. Flanagan drew a free base on the third, was shoved up a base on Elbel's sacrifice, and scored in the third. There was nothing further until the sixth, when Holland scored on Elbel's error in handling the ball. The Barons grabbed a pair in the seventh, and Elbel was an error by Jennings on Elbel's hard drive, and scored singles by Johnson and McDougall. The final pair was out in the ninth. Magee pinchhitting for Johnson, singled, and scored. Marmon also hit safely, though Massee was further than third. Magee scored while McDougall was forcing a run on Jennings on Stewart's ground ball. McDougall went on a sacrifice fly to Welchman by Kniesley. McDougall and the side went on to Long.

The battle against Curly Brown, and managed to keep the Barons check whenever they threatened. On the other hand, Brown drove in cover by the Crackers in the Second

Car Owned by Dr. Frank Edmondson and Driven by W. T. Edgar Made Best Time, Crane's Pope-Hartford Won Association Cup

While hundreds of enthusiastic spectators lined the course along Stewart avenue Saturday afternoon, a big Marmon car owned by Dr. Frank Edmondson and driven by W. T. Edgar, won the free-for-all event open to all contestants in the last time of 47 1-2 seconds. The winner was awarded the cup offered by Mark Nabors & Co.

I. S. Crane, in his famous Pope-Hartford, "Old Betsy," won the fourth event. By winning this contest, Crane became the possessor of the handsome cup offered by the Atlanta Auto and Accessory association. Betsy has proven the winner of this event for the past two years preceding Saturday's contest, thereby complying with the conditions of permanent ownership.

Ex-So. Leaguers Lead Sluggers of the National

Arthur Phelan and Beals Becker stand at Top of List With Mark of .300—Neither Has Played Regularly, However, Mace Hits .445

Arthur Phelan and Beals Becker of the Cubs and Phillies respectively, both of whom were Southern leaguers, are leading the National league batters, though neither has played regularly. Phelan, through game played Wednesday, this year was sticking for a fair average of .300.

Shawnee Mace, also of the Phillies, who has been working regularly in following week in order with a mark of .445. Mace, who played with the Cubs last season, and who is now in his third year, has hit .300 in 1913, and he dropped off a bit from the week before.

A GREAT CLIMBER

Baron Peter Kniesely Leads Southern Hitters

Peter Kniesely, Baronial outfielder, is the present leader of the sluggers of President Savannah's circuit. Up to Wednesday night, Pete was sticking for an average of .412, having replaced Larue Kirby in the lead. The latter follows just one point back. However, Tommy Long, Harry Welch, Andy McDonald and Steve Flanagan are the Crackers, who are hitting better than .350. Baby Doll Jacobson, who looks to be a contender, leads all sluggers in home runs with a total of four. The big Swede is also leading in three baggers with the same number. Jimmy Muller tops all in two-runners with ten. Kniesely is leading base stealers with a total of 11. Follow are the figures:

SATURDAY'S WINNER

Applegate Gelding, Ridden by J. McCabe, Finished First by Eight Lengths

L. L. Barnes of the Saxon Motor company of Atlanta, will start one of their true blue Saxons on an endurance run May 16, from the city hall at 9:30. At the time this practical demonstration is under way, every Saxon dealer in every section of the country will run the same test simultaneously.

of the car and is to be broken only by the observer who will ride in the car all during the test. His duties will be to see that no mechanical work is done on the car, and that the seal of the hood be broken only for gasoline and oil, and to make a detailed report of the oil and gasoline consumption.

Some great economy records are expected, as it is Mr. Barnes' desire to break the record, which was established in Detroit on a run of 135 miles per day for 30 consecutive days during which the great little car made better than 30 miles to the gallon of gasoline with no mechanical trouble.

seven went to the post. Old Ronsted led from the barrier, with Hodge and Old Ben well up, and Bronzewing trailing.

On the back stretch Hodge tried to move up, but McCabe let out a wrap on the favorite and he shot ahead, increasing his lead to the finish.

Gund moved into third place and John a bid to be considered, but in stretch Bronzewing caught him and took third easily. In addition to the horses mentioned, Watermelon and Surprising also ran.

The derby purse with $10,000 added aggregated $13,350, the richest stake in the history of this race. Of this amount approximately $10,000 went to the winner.

328 Peachtree St. Atlanta, Ga.

The ability of the PREMIER Company to sell a high grade six-cylinder car at a little more than the price of a high grade four, has been possible through the fact that the public has been attracted to the car with comparatively little selling expense. This, combined with modern machinery and methods, permits a Premier to be marketed at $2385, a price which sets a new standard for high grade sixes.

Herndon and are located at 66 Peachtree street. Atlanta takes pride in offering this necessary convenience to the visitors. Atlantians are proud of Herndon's Barber Shop, because there is not another like it in the world.

A. F. Herndon, the owner and proprietor, is a Georgia-born and Georgia-bred negro, who has won the patronage and respect of the best people in Atlanta for over thirty-two years.

The Barber Shop is unique. In it Herndon has managed to preserve the best traditions of the South, so far as service is concerned, and has added to them the finest equipment that modern scientific progress can provide. The combination is ideal. It's a barber shop that you will like and naturally admire.

KNOWN FOR TWENTY YEARS.

Practically everybody, who has lived in Atlanta for many years, knows about Herndon and his barber shop. He came here from Jonesboro, Ga., in the early 1890s, and has been here ever since. "Wily back in '85 he had a shop on Whitehall street, near where the viduet now stands. He had a barber shop at the old Markham house until it burned. Then he opened his shop in the Norcross building, where the Fourth National bank now stands. He was burned out there with practically no insurance, but spent up again and established some ten years ago or more at 66 Peachtree. He had a barber shop that has been here ever since.

When Herndon decided a few years ago that he would remodel his shop, he determined to make it the finest establishment of its kind in the south, and if possible, in the world. He visited the barber shops of every big American city from New York to Chicago. He found the finest in St. Louis, Cincinnati, Chicago and Los Angeles.

SEARCHES OLD WORLD FOR IDEAS.

In each city which he visited, he studied conditions, made notes of the improvements, and when he returned to Atlanta he had a whole budget of information on practically every large, high-class barber shop in the country.

But even then, he wasn't satisfied. He wanted to have "the best in the world," not merely as an advertising catch-phrase, but as an actual fact. He was satisfied that he would do it.

So, after he had made the grand tour of American cities from coast to coast, he set out for Europe. The principal things he learned there, so far as the interior of barber shops is concerned, confirmed him in his certainty that American shops were best, and that the only good barber shops in Europe today are the few which have adopted American methods and American equipment.

He visited the barber shops in the big cities of every capital in Europe, and found that they did not measure up to American standards. Thus he learned that "the best barber shop in the world" would be a shop that combined the ideal qualities of the American shops which he had visited.

WHAT HE FOUND IN EUROPE.

But his trip to Europe was not fruitless on a business standpoint. One valuable idea he did bring back with him—an architectural idea—and in the skillful hands of Architect L. P. McGee, the application of the idea has made the frontage of his shop on Peachtree street one of the most interesting features of that noted thoroughfare.

While in Paris, Herndon saw a doorway on the Avenue de l'Opera, which he immediately decided was the handsomest door he had ever seen on a business establishment in his life. The doors were over sixteen feet high, made of small panes of double plate glass, less than a foot in diameter, set in an elaborate but elegant framework of ebonized mahogany. Herndon had photographs made of these doorways, and brought them back to Atlanta. Skilled workmen have duplicated the pattern, and the result is the doors of the Herndon barber shop are the handsomest doors in Atlanta, barring none.

When you step through them, as you probably will sometime tomorrow afternoon as you are passing, you will be face to face with a sight well worth seeing.

ALL MARBLE AND PLATE GLASS.

The main floor of Herndon's shop fronts 25 feet on Peachtree and runs back a full 102 feet to another wide entrance at 65 Broad street. The walls of this spacious room are of white marble and plate glass. The floor is of white marble. The ceiling is of white enamel, steel; the electric chandeliers are wrought bronze and crystal; the barbers' chairs, twenty-three of them, in two long rows, are in keeping with these elegant surroundings. They are heavy white enamel, finished in green leather. The whole atmosphere of such a place is one of elegance and scrupulous cleanliness.

The shop is absolutely sanitary. All the razors, brushes, combs and other barbers' implements and accessories are kept in an antiseptic sterilizer. They are sterilized just as carefully and completely as a surgeon's instruments. Towels are sterilized. The leather headrest on each chair is equipped with a long roll of paper which turns after each patron has been attended to, presenting a fresh surface for each.

EXPLOSIVE THIRTY-FIVE MEN.

Herndon employs twenty-three barbers, and a total force of some thirty-five men. Among them are men who have been with him for the past twenty years. They are known from Richmond all the way to Mobile as the best barbers in the south.

The barber shop occupies all of the first floor, while the baths are located in an equally spacious basement. The general architectural scheme of the main floor is carried out below. The floors are all tile and marble; the ceiling is steel; everything white enamel. There are sixteen large individual bath rooms, also with marble floors and walls, with tubs of the finest enamel, and heavily leaded plumbing of the most modern type.

LUXURIOUS BATHS IN BASEMENT.

You can bathe luxuriously and at your ease in the Herndon bath rooms. The tubs are roomy; they are wide and deep and full six feet in length. You can lie down in them and splash around. The heavy white enamel porcelain is a veritable ideal of cleanliness, and the bath mat you jump out on after you have finished your ablutions lies on a marble tile floor.

If you prefer a shower bath to a tub, you can get the same kind of shower you enjoy at your club. And you have a marble-tiled room all to yourself.

While these baths are as elegant as you would find in the finest club or home, there are fancy prices or charges. Twenty-five cents, which includes soap and towels, has been the price charged at Herndon's shop for years past, and it will be the price for years to come.

HE STICKS TO OLD PRICES.

In preserving with all his splendid modern equipment the best traditions of old-time service, there is another thing that Herndon has succeeded in preserving, and that is the old-time scale of barber shop prices. Twenty years ago our fathers, even the most well-to-do and open-handed among them, would have opened their eyes in sheer amazement if they had been asked to pay more than 25 cents for a hair cut or more than 5 cents for a shine. It was practically the same way ten years ago. Twenty-five cents was the regular price for a hair cut, just as 5 cents in this country is the universal price for riding on the street car. But today Herndon is one of the few strictly high-class barber shops in the country that has stuck to the old prices. Practically all the rest charge 35 cents for a hair cut, and many of them charge 10 cents for a shine; but Herndon has not changed, and, with all his magnificent new equipment, he is not going to change.

HE STICKS TO OLD PRICES.

Like the Florentine barber in "Romola," Herndon has counted among his patrons many of the most notable men of this city and state for practically a generation past.

There are supreme court and superior court judges, prominent lawyers, state house officers and ex-state house officers, politicians, ministers, planters from every city and community in Georgia, who have been making it their regular custom for fully twenty years to visit the Herndon shop when they are in Atlanta.

They know Herndon first when he came to Atlanta as a journeyman barber and got employment in the old Dougherty-Hutchens shop that operated for years on the corner where the Empire building now stands. Herndon was efficient, respectful, thrifty. Customers soon began to prefer his chair. At the end of six months he bought a half interest in the business, and a year later he got his start. Herndon's barber shop eventually became a permanent fixture, a landmark in Atlanta. In the course of years it was moved from one location to another, but never more than a stone's throw in one direction or another from Five Points.

and the old Herndon clientele has never changed. The patrons who used to go to Herndon's way back in the 1890s are still going there.

IS A HEAVY TAXPAYER.

The result is that Herndon is today a comparatively rich man. He pays considerably more taxes than any other colored man in Atlanta. He is the only colored man who is the proprietor of a business on central Peachtree. But he is the same "Lor' Herndon who came here from Jonesboro twenty years ago. Prosperity hasn't spoiled him.

It was at the request of some of Herndon's oldest patrons that he decided to invite the ladies of Atlanta to see his shop. Any institution that is the finest of its kind in the world is intrinsically interesting, but there is still another reason. Herndon's shop is especially fitted to take care of the children—the youngsters whose hair needs cutting just as often as fathers but who do not exactly fit into the high-backed barber chair that is built "basement" style, with which all are enamored.

With detachable seats, upholstered in green leather, on which the youngster can perch with perfect comfort while his curly locks are being trimmed. This will surely interest mothers.

DAIRYINGLY BEAUTIFUL AT NIGHT.

Elegant in appearance in the daytime, the new shop is positively dazzling at night. The bronze electric chandeliers suspended at intervals from the ceiling are elaborately hung with crystals which gladden like diamonds when the lights are turned on. Wall fixture lights are also of bronze and crystal. Practically the whole walls, on both sides, for a double length of more than 100 feet, are an unbroken series of high plate glass mirrors, set in polished Georgia marble.

The roominess of the shop is one of its most attractive features. With a very high ceiling, and high glass doors opening on the streets in both directions, the place has a "feeling" of spaciousness about it that is delightfully pleasant as compared with the crowded "basement" shops with which all are familiar.

Although there are twenty-three chairs, they are not further apart, with many "elbow room" for the public and the barbers, than in most shops which only have a half dozen.

Herndon, by the way, has on duty regularly as many barbers as he has seats.

THE FINEST IN THE WORLD.

The statement that the Herndon establishment is the finest barber shop in the world is not an idle or presumptuous claim. Neither is it a glittering generality. Here are some facts to substantiate it.

To begin with the remodeling work has cost a cool $20,000.

Twenty thousand dollars is the largest sum that has ever been spent in fitting up a barber shop.

The main floor of the shop is 102 feet from door to door, running through the block and opening on both Peachtree and Broad streets.

The floor measurement is 102 by 24 feet, giving a floor space on the main floor of over 2400 square feet.

This gives the largest floor-space of any barber shop in the world. In addition to this the basement, where the baths are located, are equally spacious and fitted up in an equally luxurious manner.

The barbers' chairs are the finest and most expensive that can be bought, and there are more of them than in any other single shop in the world.

The marble and plate glass fixtures and decorations are the most perfect that money can buy.

The shop force consists of thirty-five men, of whom twenty-three are barbers—the largest force employed in any one shop in the world.

Welcome, Shriners—and all other visitors.

What an army Uncle Sam could raise in Atlanta just now!

Es Selamu Aleikun.

A million goodmornings and a world of happy greetings to the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine!

Atlanta's heart is open to their starry caravans.
She is grateful for their presence and proud to be their hosts. Their people are her people, and their pleasure is her soul's concern. She welcomes them, one and all, in the shining spirit of her Jo-cund May, and trusts that every hour of their sojourn will be brimmed with delight.

Never before in America and never, perhaps, in all the world has there been so great a convention as that of the Shriners now gathering here. In point of numbers alone, it surpasses all records. It is assembling between thirty-five thousand and fifty thousand visitors, more people than ever flocked to a national Democratic or national Republican convention.

Shriners are pouring in from every State of the Union, from Canada and Mexico and Hawaii.
Ten days ago their pilgrimage began, and now they are arriving by tens of thousands. In addition to the Shriners who come in an official capacity from every quarter of the western hemisphere, there are a streaming rank and file of Shriners from neighboring cities and States, and besides these a vast inflow of visitors who avail themselves of the low rates offered by all the railroads to enjoy, as onlookers, the wonders of this week.

Not only in size but also in its widely representative and brilliant personnel the Shrine convention is the nation's most distinctive event of its kind.
This great order, numbering a membership of two hundred thousand in North America, is the flower of Masonry. It is composed exclusively of thirty-second degree Masons, Scottish rite, and of Knights Templar, York Rite. Not all of these high degree Masons are Shriners, but all Shriners are high degree Masons.

For culture and social prestige and all the graces of fraternalism and citizenship, a rarer body of men could not be found. No wonder the rivalry for Shrine conventions is so keen among American cities. Atlanta never scored a higher victory than in winning this great convention for 1914. A little more than a year ago, it will be remembered, we plunged into the contest, and, as usually, the vim and power of Atlanta's spirit proved irresistible. On the afternoon of April the eighth, 1913, there appeared on the front page of The Journal, the following appeal:

"The Shriners of North America must meet in Atlanta in 1914.

"Atlanta must raise a fund to entertain with fitting magnificence.

"Come on, Atlanta!

"Let's make a twelve-hour campaign of it, and raise that fund between sunrise and sunset Wednesday.

"To start it The Journal gives $500.

"Let the town get ready to follow, and when Wednesday dawns let the money pour in, and let there be $50,000—the amount that the local Shriners need—in sight before dark that evening."

You remember the result, do you not? By Wednesday evening, within twelve hours or less, the sixty thousand dollars had been raised, and sixteen thousand more piled on for bounteous measure. And with this splendid pledge, Yaarb Temple's representatives went to Dallas and won the 1914 convention.

And now the wonderful fruitage of that victory is being gathered. Nowhere else does the blue arch of May bend over a city so bright and musical and merry as Atlanta will be this week. Her buildings are alive and gorgeous with color. Her streets are ringing with the good humor of thousands of guests, and soon will be turned into lanes of enchantment by pageants such as only the Shrine can present. A week of magic it will be, of festive fellowship, as keen with pleasure as the scintilla of ego, as glorious with good times as the crescent and the star.

There will be as many brass bands nearly as hat bands.

We expect that regional band to come to the rescue on the first of the month.

Maybe, some day, histories will refer, instead of to wars, to the mediation of such and such a date.

The Case of the Railroads.

The Travelers Protective Association of Alabama has adopted resolutions asking the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant the eastern railroads a rate increase, if the facts submitted warrant it, and also urging the railroads themselves to eliminate such rates as are discriminatory.

This is a peculiarly significant request. The commercial travelers are deeply concerned in freight rate issues, and vitally concerned in the country's business welfare. No men are more jealous of the shipper's rights, no men have fought more persistently for a square deal from the railroads to the public.
When, therefore, the organized commercial travelers of Alabama lift their voice in behalf of justice to the railroads, we may be sure that there is merit in the plea. If under existing rates the eastern railroads are not able to earn a fair return on the investment, if their revenues are not sufficient for adequate service and growing needs, then, says the Travelers Protective Association of Alabama, they should be permitted to advance their rates.

And that is the opinion of right-thinking business men the country over. The public knows that there can be no general prosperity if the railroads are driven to the brink of bankruptcy. It is a matter of record that in recent years the cost of labor and material and cost of operation has greatly increased.
The net earnings of the eastern railroads, if the evidence they have submitted is to be credited, have steadily decreased. They declare that they have reached the limit of their present resources, and that they must either be allowed an advance in rates or lapse into inefficiency, if not ruin.

If this be true, the country's common interests require a favorable and speedy response to the railroads' appeal. They are entitled to no privileges, but they are certainly entitled to subsistence and a reasonable profit.

The Alabama T. P. A.'s are no less emphatic in asking for relief from discriminatory rates than in asking a fair deal for the carriers. If the railroads suffer when revenues are insufficient, shippers suffer even more when rates are not equally adjusted. It is not low rates but fair rates that the country needs.
It is not excessive charges so much as unequal charges that hurts business. Let the railroads abolish discrimination, and there will be little future complaint against rates.

The Travelers Protective Association does well to insist upon this point; and it is to be hoped that their appeal will not go unheeded. The public is very fair-minded toward the railroads today; the roads should be equally fair-minded toward the public.

Of immediate importance, however, is the case now pending in the Interstate Commerce Commission. It has been nearly a year since the application for a rate advance was made. The railroads, the various field of industrial interests related to the roads, and the common business interests of the United States are entitled to the earliest possible decision.
Whatever the Commission may do, it should end present disquieting uncertainty. Until its decision is rendered, business will lag and enterprise will stand in doubt. There should be no further delay in this supremely important matter.

Listen to the band!

We expect every Shriner to do his duty by catching the Atlanta spirit.

Now that we have the Shriners, we'll show them what we are going to do with them.

Our Undeveloped Land.

Imagine a farm covering all the United States east of the Missouri and Mississippi rivers! Imagine its varied and enormous power of production!
This field of industrial interests related to the roads,
and the common business interests of the United States are entitled to the earliest possible decision.
Whatever the Commission may do, it should end
present disquieting uncertainty. Until its decision is rendered, business will lag and enterprise will stand in doubt. There should be no further delay
in this supremely important matter.

If these eight-hundred and thirty-two million acres, which now are idle, but which would be profitably used, were consolidated, they would be equivalent to the combined areas of New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana.

Of this vast area of undeveloped soil a very large and important part is in the Southeast. In the South Atlantic and Gulf States alone there are some twenty-five million acres ideally suited to truck farming and millions of other acres equally as well suited to cattle raising. Indeed, the labor resources of this region are sufficient to produce food for many times the entire country's present population through long decades to come.

Only thirty-two per cent of Georgia's soil is now titled, and the area of this one State is large as that of England and Wales combined. In addition to land that is available for use almost immediately, Georgia has nearly two million acres of swamp and overflow land, the greater part of which can be reclaimed through drainage and made wonderfully productive.

It is well to remember that this country's agricultural resources have as yet been barely touched, and that all the food yet drawn from its soil is but a crumb to the vast stores that can be gathered in the future.

Japan's Domestic Problems.

Japan evidently seeks no quarrel with the United States. In the Mexican crisis she has carefully avoided any act that might be suspected as unfriendly to us, and in the delicate issues provoked by Colombia's anti-ship land law she has been singularly patient. The fact is, her concern over domestic problems is so great that she has no mind to invite foreign complications.

For years, Japan's political unrest has been growing. Her masses have been feverish with the same spirit that led to China's great revolution. Their ancient, unreasoning loyalty to established institutions has given place to an attitude of sharp questioning. They think more boldly and feel more intensely concerning matters of government. They are troubled with the world-old dream of liberty and human rights.

The aristocracy of Japan once shared much of the popular faith that held the emperor as divine in origin and power. But today the aristocracy is on trial. Socialism has become a recognizable force in the empire's thought. The popular branch of the government has increased wonderfully in potency and ambition. Ministries are now overthrown and official acts are loudly challenged. Only a few sessions ago thirty members of the Imperial Parliament were indicted on charges of having accepted bribe from big business interests and high officers of the navy and were in prison for similar offenses.

"An overtaxed people," says the Louisville Courier-Journal, "fast absorbing Western ideas of freedom of speech and independence of action, is very much from Missouri" as to the greater empire idea and as to the right of the upper class to enrich itself by political graft, while the Japanese rice farmer sells his product and buys cheaper food because he cannot afford rice. The next few decades of Japanese history bid fair to be a period of struggle for political and economic rights at home. There will scarcely be time or means for adventures abroad.

The population of Atlanta this week is 250,000, including some Shriners.

The mediators at Niagara Falls will work in surroundings made romantic by many a wedding tour.

About the time a man discovers that he is a victim of misplaced confidence he also discovers that some of his money was misplaced simultaneously.

The Code of the Air.

In Europe the law of the land has been supplanted by the law of the air. A German aeronaut was arrested and imprisoned the other day for trespassing upon Russia's atmosphere. His balloon, which had traveled nearly two thousand miles and had been up forty-seven hours continuously, drifted over the international boundary. The police eyed him warily as he floated through the Russian sun, and took him in hand the moment he descended.
He was sentenced to six months imprisonment, but was discharged with a sharp warning that another offense would not be so lightly dealt with.

"On the Continent," observes the New York Sun,
"where great military establishments are kept up and where there is a natural sensitiveness about espionage, the aerial code must be strict and its enforcement automatic. Germany would not hesitate to deal summarily with alien aeronauts who sailed their dirigibles or free aeroplanes in the vicinity of a fortress." The rivalry among European Powers to win and hold supremacy in the air promises to become as keen as that which spurs them to build battleships and to maintain great armies. Germany has a fleet of three hundred and seventy-five aeroplanes and forty dirigible balloons, and her expenditures on military aeronautics are estimated at twenty-eight and a half million dollars. France has five hundred and fifty aeroplanes, and within the last five years has spent some twenty-three and a quarter million dollars in this connection. Russia's aviation corps numbers more than three hundred aeroplanes, and England's is being steadily increased.

The great military establishment that so seriously concerns the law of the air is not the least of the reasons why nations are so anxious to keep watch keepers within national boundaries. Laws of the air will doubtless become more clearly defined and more important.

Editorials in Brief

Ensign Maddox, wireless officer of the battleship Utah, who has been connected with the signal service ashore since the landing of the Americans, has demonstrated the feasibility of operating wireless from a train. With apparatus aboard he went on one of the trains being operated to the point where the track is torn up and interchanged messages with the ships and shore stations. The scouting work of aviators over and above Vera Cruz continues, but the men in charge are not permitted to carry their investigation far into the interior—Vera Cruz City to the New York Times.

If the Liberal and Unionist leaders at this late date can get together and arrange a working compromise in regard to Home Rule, it will be a remarkable triumph of common sense. In the last few weeks, from their political methods, there has been little reason to hope for any such display of sanity on the part of Liberal agitators like Sir Edward Carson and Mr. Bonar Law—New York World.

THESE SEVENTEEN

BY DR. FRANK CRAWF.
(Copyright, 1914, by Frank Crawford.)

In the occupation of Vera Cruz by the forces of the United States, the most scientific of all the acts of war. This operation is the blockade. It is the most important of all operations in that it effects its object of reducing the enemy without accompanying the spilling of his blood.

In his choice of weapons for forcing Mexico to redeem herself from the horror of continual slaughter and pillage, President Wilson determined upon the blockade of the ships. The blockade is the most important of all operations in that it effects its object of reducing the enemy without accompanying the spilling of his blood.

Behind this impenetrable wall the free reign of anarchy would soon have raged into exhaustion.
Burned all their powder and expended every cartridge,
Lack of munitions of war, lack of food, of clothes, and a general starvation, would have brought out the pacification of Mexico through the carrying out of this most certain and most scientific of war operations, the complete blockade.

Destruction of Mexico's supplies and wealth, and not of her cities, is the most scientific of all the acts of war. This operation is the blockade. It is the most important of all operations in that it effects
its object of reducing the enemy without accompanying the spilling of his blood.

The Spanish-American war cost the navy department $45,000,000 in excess of its regular appropriation. This was an enormous sum. The navy department, however, was not the only one to suffer. The army department also suffered. The navy department, however, was not the only one to suffer. The army department also suffered.

In our naval operations against Spain there was expended under the urgent necessity act $25,000,000 in excess of the regular appropriation. This was an enormous sum. The navy department, however, was not the only one to suffer. The army department also suffered.

Another item of extra expense occasioned by this war was the cost of the navy. The navy department, however, was not the only one to suffer. The army department also suffered.

The old type of big gun was made to fire about once in every five minutes, while today they are constructed to fire twice every minute. This, in the modern battleship, means that the rate of fire is increased from one shot every five minutes to two shots every minute. This, in the modern battleship, means that the rate of fire is increased from one shot every five minutes to two shots every minute.

An improvement has been adopted by the British navy in the construction of their battleships. The ships of the enemy still easier of accomplishment.
This is an apparatus for one-man control of the broadside. The British navy has adopted this apparatus. The British navy has adopted this apparatus.

Each of these heavy guns has a muzzle energy of 4,000 foot-tons, or strikes with the force of 6,000 tons falling one foot. The advantage of the new type of gun is that it can fire at a much greater range than the old type. The new type of gun can fire at a range of 20,000 feet, while the old type can only fire at a range of 10,000 feet. The new type of gun can fire at a range of 20,000 feet, while the old type can only fire at a range of 10,000 feet.

What the naval battle between two modern first-class fleets would be like can be only conjectured. It is safe to say, however, that it would be terrible beyond measure. The modern battleship is a most formidable weapon. The modern battleship is a most formidable weapon.

True, there were fifteen-inch and sixteen-inch guns on the battleships of some nations way back between 1850 and 1880. But their power and dead-weight was less than that of the modern twenty-inch gun. The modern twenty-inch gun is a most formidable weapon. The modern twenty-inch gun is a most formidable weapon.

Today the grim draughts in battle would utter while dim and distant illumination. The battle would be a most formidable weapon. The battle would be a most formidable weapon.

Two interesting items in the modern paraphernalia for battles are the smoke and illumination shells.
The first is burst before the enemy to conceal from him the position of his own ships. The second is a shell which has been suggested as an aid for waging a naval battle at night.

THE JOURNAL PUBLISHES SHRINERS' CARTOON PAGE

Geo. W. Curtis, of Paper's Art Department Worked Laboriously for Its Success

The Journal publishes today a ten-page supplement in which prominent Atlanta Shriners are cleverly caricatured. This is probably the largest collection of cartoons ever published in a newspaper at one time.

This supplement was the idea of George W. Curtis, one of the cartoonists in the Journal's art department. It was he who conceived the plan, and bore the brunt of its laborious execution, and to him is due chief credit for use of the most unique and interesting features ever shown in a southern newspaper.

Mr. Curtis has been aided in his task by a number of other capable artists and their joint efforts have produced a supplement that is sure to attract nationwide attention.

It will be eagerly sought by hundreds of Shriners and is worthy of being preserved by every visitor as a souvenir of the convention.

There are 81 cartoons in all including a large front page cartoon of Porcupine Adair, illustrious potentate of Vashab Temple.

CAFE AT BROOKHAVEN TO BE OPENED THIS SUNDAY

After being closed during the cold winter months, the cafe at the Capital City Country Club will be opened this Sunday morning.

The opening this year is earlier than usual, because of the coming of the M. E. Shriners, who are the guests of the country club, says that under the new arrangements there will be special a la carte service at all times, and dinner parties, suppers and other entertainments can be readily arranged for.

Many Shriners will visit the beautiful country club while here, and this cafe feature will prove a great attraction to guests whose appetites have been sharpened by the long train ride.

PASSENGER SCHEDULES TO BE DISCUSSED MAY 15

A conference between representatives of the cities along the Chattanooga branch of the Central of Georgia railroad and the officials of the railroad will be held at the Hotel Anley on May 15. The question of adjusting passenger schedules on this line will be taken up for discussion.

Representatives from Rome, Bremen, Buchanan, Cedarhurst, and Carrollton will meet several passengers from J. C. Hall and general superintendent Johnson. For several weeks the Home chamber of commerce and the commercial bodies of the other cities have been conducting an aggressive campaign for a revision of the passenger schedules and a double daily train service on this line.

WANT TO GO TO EUROPE AS GEORGIA DELEGATE?

If there are any Georgians who are sufficiently interested in municipal problems that they are willing to defray their own expenses on a trip to Europe to study these questions, Governor Slaton would be glad to hear from them.

The governor has been requested by Clarence J. Owens, of Washington, managing director of the Southern Commercial Congress, to appoint delegates from Georgia on the American commission of municipal executives and civic leaders, which is being assembled by the Southern Commercial congress for the purpose of investigating civic problems in the large cities of Europe this summer.

STOLEN JEWELS VALUED AT $5,000 RECOVERED

(By Associated Press.) CHICAGO, May 9.—Jewelry valued at $5,000 in a traveling bag, stolen from Mrs. Margaret Canfield Snow, of Oshkosh, N. Y., while in a railroad car yesterday, was recovered last night because the thief not knowing the value of the bag had pawned it unopened for $25.

Detectives notified of the theft recovered it in a pawn shop, where it had not yet been opened.

MERCER'S FRIENDS WANT HIM FOR NEXT GOVERNOR

Former Editor and Game Warden However Says Too Expensive to Be Candidate

Jesse E. Mercer, sometime editor, and Georgia's first game warden, is looming up as another possibility in connection with the impending race in Georgia for gubernatorial honors.

Mr. Mercer himself is doing nothing to promote this latest boom. In fact, he declares now as he has on numerous other occasions in the past it costs too much money to run for governor for him to make the race—that in his opinion, "no poor man can afford the honor." However, from all parts of the state, "friends are" writing him, pleading their support and urging him to make a race.

These friends point out that while he has held but one public office—that of state game warden—he filled that with conspicuous ability, and besides this, he has been closely in touch with the politics of the state for many years in his capacity as editor. The weekly press of the state, it is shown, would be squarely behind Mr. Mercer should he decide to make the race and with this support assured him in the beginning, his friends do not see how he could fail to make the other candidates exert themselves to the utmost to defeat him.

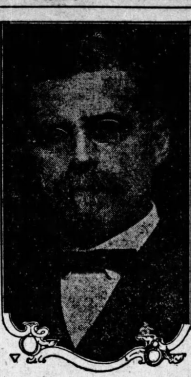

Nor do the claims of his friends that Mr. Mercer's candidacy would be backed by the weekly press, especially of south Georgia, seem to be without foundation. Many of the editors of these papers have advocated his candidacy in the columns of their papers while many others have written personal letters asking him to make the race and assuring him their support.

The Jessup Sentinel in a recent issue says: "The weekly press of the state have an opportunity of nominating a governor and should take advantage of this opportunity and do themselves and south Georgia the justice that has been denied year after year, for a time wherein the memory of man runseth not to the contrary."

With Jesse E. Mercer, of Fitzgerald, and of the weekly press as their candidate, can be done and will be accomplished easily if his friends of the fourth estate insist on it.

Mr. Mercer, himself, has little to say about the matter further than to give as his opinion that running for governor is too expensive a pastime for any save rich men to indulge. He admits that he is being earnestly urged by friends in all parts of the state to make the race, but to all intents and appearances is devoting more time to the loan company he is organizing, the aim of which is to furnish farmers money at 7 per cent, than he is to politics just at present.

GIGANTIC ELECTRIC STAR TO FLASH AT FIVE POINTS

Attention of Thousands Will Be Attracted by Elaborate Shrine Decoration

Quite the most elaborate Shrine decoration in the city, one that has attracted the attention of thousands and will continue to do so nightly throughout the week, is the gigantic star at Five Points.

It was installed by the Hunter-Hodge Electric company, three weeks being required to complete the installation. A large force of men have been working on it day and night.

The weight of the star and streamers is 2,000 pounds. There are 1,400 lights used, and the total amount of electricity used, is the gigantic star at Five Points.

WILL BEGIN WORK ON PAVING CHEROKEE AVE.

The public works committee of the board of county commissioners announced Saturday at the regular meeting, that during the next week the work of paving Cherokee avenue from Georgia avenue to Grant Park, will be commenced.

At the meeting the contract for the crushed stone to be used as a foundation for the bituminous pavement was let.

280. The star is operated by a 72-point flasher.

The Shrine emblem on its face is the only portion of it that does not move, the rest of the star and streamers flaming all night long in a swirling mass that flashes a message to every part of the city.

PIERCE OIL CONCERN IS TURNED DOWN IN TEXAS

Request for Permit to Do Business Will Be Taken to High Court

(By Associated Press.) AUSTIN, Tex., May 9.—The Pierce Oil corporation, a Virginia concern, is not entitled to a permit to do business in Texas, according to State Attorney General R. F. Looney. The opinion was in reply to the company's request for a permit to enter Texas.

Refusal was based on the claim that the Pierce Oil corporation is the successor of the Waters-Pierce Oil company, which was ousted from Texas in 1907 for violation of the state anti-trust laws. The company will carry its request to the state supreme court.

Hospitality

Opportunity has knocked. The Atlanta Spirit has burst its bearings and thrown conventions to the winds.

Bunting-bedecked buildings and typically designed windows and lighted highways are the speaking deeds that overshadow mere words of welcome, and forever blot out the ancient idea that hospitality begins and ends at home.

Real hospitality is instituted wherever people are gathered together.

The Shriners are with us!

The pleasure is ours.

HOSPITALITY means "liberal entertainment," and such "giving" imparts much happiness.

To entertain so large and distinguished a body of fine men as compose the Great Shriners' Convention is indeed a privilege. Atlanta brilliantly responds to the compliment.

The MUSE Clothing Store is a vital part of Atlanta's plan for hospitality. It is an institution of service devoted to Atlanta and her visitors—to men in particular. But somewhere on our three floors will be found something of interest to everyone—

Men's Suits, Hats, Furnishings---Main Floor.

Women's Shoe Section; Children's and Boys' Dept. ---Second Floor.

Tailoring and Motor Goods---Third Floor.

This store is filled with workers who are hospitable, whose desire it is to give all who enter it absolute and pleasant service. We want to know that all who enter our doors are sure to feel that they have a real business home, and that they may be positive of receiving such treatment as one friend would expect from another.

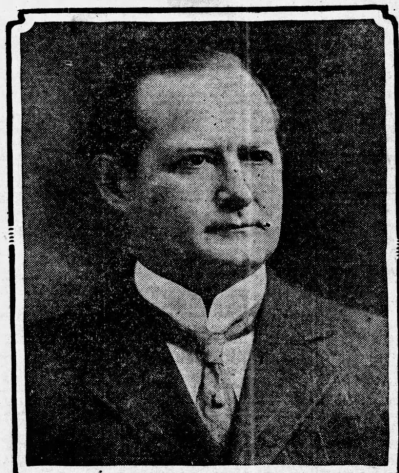

We have planned our windows as an opportune compliment to our visitors. There is no mirage on the other side of the desert. Everything is real. Come in and see.

In honor of the great parade, this store will be closed Tuesday morning---open 1 P. M.

on Tuesday Night in New Chamber Building

EXCHANGE BUREAU HAS
50 PER CENT INCREASE

H. T. Moore, the Efficient Secretary, Was Re-elected and Also Named as Delegate to National Convention

A noteworthy increase in membership, growth and greater efficiency in every department of its activities, was shown by the Atlanta Association of Credit Men at its annual meeting last Friday night.

The meeting was held in the assembly hall of the new Chamber of Commerce building and was presided over by H. E. Choate in the absence of E. L. Adams, the president, who left for the second year. H. D. Carter, E. L. Rhodes and Ralph Rosenbaum.

The delegates for the annual national convention at Rochester this year are as follows: E. L. Adams, J. L. Baldwin and Harry T. Moore.

The report of H. E. Choate, chairman of the exchange bureau, showed that the membership had increased at least 50 per cent since it began business on January 1, bringing the total membership now up to 27. His report likewise showed the success of the bureau was constantly increasing in efficiency and popularity.

V. Logan, chairman of the general membership committee of the association, reported that the number of new members during the year, which gives the association now a membership of 27. The report of the adjustment bureau chairman, presented by Ralph Rosenbaum, showed that the work of the bureau for the past year had been the most successful in its history.

The speaker at this evening was Judge Joseph H. Lumpkin, whose subject was "What I Don't Know About Credit" and J. D. Hunter, who spoke on "The Credit Men and Public Accountants."

Following the business of the evening a delicious luncheon was served.

FIRST CUCUMBERS THIS WEEK FOR SALTING PLANT

Jones Brothers & Co. Will Begin Receiving Product at Tifton Station

The first cucumbers of the 1914 crop will begin to be delivered the latter part of this week at the new salting station of Jones Brothers & Co. at Tifton, Ga. The farmers about Tifton have planted about 200 acres of cucumbers to supply this plant. The vines are now in full leaf and the cucumbers are ready for delivery in a short time. The season will last for several months. The company's salting station has a tank capacity for 50,000 bushels. The Georgia pickles put up by this company last year were a great success, and from the present outlook Georgia will supply a big volume of the company's stock next season.

REVSON HAVING RUSH OF SHRINER BUSINESS

One of the Atlanta concerns who have had a rush of business due to the branch of the Shrine week is Frank Revson, bottler and soda fountain supplies.

Rush orders to the factories for quick action on express shipments of extra supplies of bar and soda fountain supplies was made last week.

LIFE ON THE ROAD

A LITTLE GAME OF KEE-BACK IN THE EVENING.

A. B. & A. WANTS HIGHER RATE ON Z MILEAGE

Asks Commission's Permission to Pull This Form on 2-1-2 Cent Basis

Following the restoration of pulling Form Z mileage on a basis of 2 cents on the A. B. & A. road week before last, the officials of the road pulled this Friday to the state railroad commission to be allowed to pull Form Z on a basis of 2 cents per mile reduction from the maximum rate per mile allowed the A. B. & A. by the commission, which is 2 cents a mile.

Should the request of the road be granted, the rate of Form Z mileage on the A. B. & A. would be pulled on a basis of 2 1-2 cents a mile, instead of 2 cents, at at present. In other words, an increase of 1-2 cent a mile over its present rate.

H. D. Shackelford, who represented the U. C. R. and the Georgia Travelers in the recent mileage adjustment, stated Friday that he would not be put on the A. B. & A. by the commission. He stated that the higher rate would not be put on by the A. B. & A. at competitive points, and for this reason and because of the fact that the two-cent rate existed formerly on the A. B. & A., and this road had agreed to a restoration of its former status he would insist that the advance in rate be not at all.

Before interchangeable mileage was removed by the roads the A. B. & A. pulled Form Z on a basis of 2 1-2 cents a mile. On complaint of John A. Culver, a traveling man, the chairman of the railroad commission informed officials of the road that this practice was in violation of the agreement. Following this the road restored the old practice of pulling Form Z at 2 cents a mile and

John Deere Co. to Increase Already Large Ad Volume

A heavy increase in the already large amount of advertising being done in the southern states by the John Deere Plow company is planned for this year. Twelve thousand letters including booklets, etc., advertising their products were sent direct from the Atlanta office to prospective customers last year. It is expected to increase this by twenty-five to fifty per cent during this year. The company has few equals in the matter of supporting its salesmen, with advertising matter. Besides the general advertising such as display signs, etc., the company does much to help sell the goods for the retail dealers by cutting pressure by correspondence on all prospects of whom they learn.

UNCLE SAM'S BREAD SHOWS LARGE SALES INCREASE

Company Has Increased Its Delivery Service Three Times in Six Months

So rapidly is the business of the Schlesinger-Meyer Baking company, makers of "Uncle Sam" bread, increasing, that three times within the last six months has the company found it necessary to improve its city and suburban delivery service. They have added automobiles and wagon service to their already efficient wagon deliveries until now the system is so rapidly perfecting it can be made. The Schlesinger-Meyer company, however, are always on the lookout for ways to serve the dealers in the most rapid and efficient manner possible. Not only has its city and suburban business shown a marked increase, but its out-of-town trade has kept equal pace with the near-at-home advance.

Still later, on last Friday, filed its petition to be allowed to charge the dealers. The petition has been set down for hearing by the commission on May 28.

LUMPKIN-HALL CO. TO HOLD BIG AUCTION SALE

Firm Will Sell $100,000 of Merchandise on May 13, 14 and 15

Lumpkin-Hall company the new dry goods and notions firm which recently bought out the immense stock of new, clean, up-to-date merchandise of the Ward-Fruit company have announced a big auction sale of this stock and other up-to-date merchandise for Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of next week. The auction will commence on Wednesday afternoon May 13, and will continue through Friday, May 15. The hours of sale will be so arranged as not to interfere with the Shriners' parade. The goods that visiting buyers will have the opportunity to peruse, whether they are big or small buyers, will total in value $100,000.

"The Ward-Fruit stock," said Mr. Lumpkin, in discussing the coming auction "which we purchased and will sell at auction to the men and in first class shape. I have recently been to New York and bought goods to fill in this stock, consequently the stock as it now stands is almost entirely complete in every way."

"We are offering this entire stock for sale with the idea of moving into new quarters into which we expect to go as soon as possible. We will continue to buy and sell goods and have auction sales every 60 and 90 days along the line that the old firm of Lumpkin Company did business."

CIGAR JOBBERS BUSY ON SHRINE WEEK TRADE

The Capital City Tobacco company, the Lamar & Hamilton Drug Co. and the other distributors of cigars to the retail trade are preparing for a heavy demand for cigars during Shrine week. A good increase over the average business was registered last week and a still heavier sale is expected during the coming week. The wholesalers are well prepared with a good supply of all brands.

W. H. WYATT, OF RIDLEY-WILLIAMSON - WYATT COMPANY, WAS ELECTED MEMBER OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

A successful session and a royal good time marked the annual convention of the Southern Wholesale Dry Goods association which was held on May 8 and 9 at Mobile, Alabama.

The meeting was noteworthy for the number of able addresses that were delivered on topics of vital interest to the dry goods world of the south. Among these addresses was a speech by R. K. Rambo of John City, a member of the company of Atlanta, on the proposed pure fabric law now before Congress, and a talk by Mr. Edward M. M. Smith and company on the latter law on photographing samples. The question of mill tickets was also discussed.

The convention in resolution protested against congressional legislation seeking to learn the names and manufacturer of all merchandise but in-dured in the company's letter to the chairman to the extent that "all goods shall be placed on the goods to mine represent the quality."

The following officers were elected: President, H. V. Covington, Jacksonville, Fla.; First vice president, C. Fred Thomas, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Second vice president, N. Lobman, Montgomery, Ala.; Treasurer, E. R. King, Bristol, Tenn.; Secretary, Norman H. Johnson, Richmond, Va.

The new executive committee is composed of the following: C. O. Freeman, Richmond, Va., chairman; W. H. Wyatt, of the Ridley-Williamson company, Richmond, Va.; R. K. Rambo, of the Ridley-Williamson company, Richmond, Va.; R. K. Rambo, of the Ridley-Williamson company, Richmond, Va.; R. K. Rambo, of the Ridley-Williamson company, Richmond, Va.

The chairman of the divisions were elected as follows: District number 1, R. C. Watts of Lynchburg, Va.; District No. 2, J. O. Hicks, of Knoxville, Tenn.; District No. 3, R. K. Rambo of Atlanta, Va.; District No. 4, N. Lobman of Montgomery, Ala.; District No. 5, R. K. Rambo of Atlanta, Va.; District No. 6, N. Lobman of Montgomery, Ala.; District No. 7, R. K. Rambo of Atlanta, Va.; District No. 8, N. Lobman of Montgomery, Ala.; District No. 9, R. K. Rambo of Atlanta, Va.; District No. 10, N. Lobman of Montgomery, Ala.

The convention was brought to a close on May 9 with a trip down Mobile bay on the U. S. Revenue Cutter, Visona, tendered the visiting delegates by the Mobile Commercial club.

ATLANTA COFFEE MILLS ADDS RICE TO LINES

The Atlanta Coffee Mills company, who are building up a good trade in Atlanta-ground coffee with the local grocers, have decided to add rice to their line of coffee.

The first shipment of rice was ready several days ago and the company's salesmen are already soliciting orders.

SALES & THE ROAD

"WHAT KIND O' TRAVELER ARE YOU?"

"There has been a marked improvement in hotels and restaurants in the last twenty years both in the country towns and in the cities," observed an old traveler to whom all phases of road life became as familiar as A, B, C in the two decades that he traveled the southeastern states for an Atlanta firm. This improvement is to be noticed in service, sanitation and in general comfort of guests. In the old days, however, each stop at a hotel or meal at a restaurant, especially in a small town, was a serious adventure. In itself. Prices were uncertain and variable. Not only were the charges all that the traveler would bear, but each guest was stood up personally for all that he would bear.

"There was a story that used to go the rounds in those days which will give you some idea of the conditions prevailing. A traveling salesman, so the story ran, had finished his business and asked the young girl of the house who had waited on the table what his bill was.

"I'll have to ask mamma," she replied, and she ran out of the dining room up the stairs to the hall above, where she found her mother. "Overhead this conversation:

"The man wants to pay for his dinner," said the girl. "How much must I charge him?"

NEW MILEAGE SYSTEM

Declares Recent Adjustment, a Happy and Satisfactory Solution of Problem

Editor Firing Line:

Unfortunately I have been detained from my office for practically fourteen weeks with rheumatism, and it may now seem a little late for me to be commending this matter to the T. P. A.'s of this state and the south, but I cannot too strongly congratulate them, as well as National Director R. A. Broyles for the efficient and noble work he did in adjusting with the railroads the recent mileage matter. I feel that the organization as well as the traveling men merchants and others, who are constant patrons of the railroads, should appreciate the happy solution and the satisfactory adjustment which has been made.

I have always contended if the traveling men would meet the railroads in a business like way, they could accom-

SALES OF REFRIGERATORS

Sales of refrigerators at the Rosenfeld company, the firm of house furnishers who make quite a specialty of this part of their line, are breaking records.

The company's supply, which was ordered with a fair allowance for increase over last year's business, has already been exhausted. A rush order was sent the factory several days ago for another car.

This concern also reports a good demand from the furniture stores for goods.

SPECIALTY SALES CO.

Manager of New Idea Firm Tells How It Works in Practice

With the establishment of the Atlanta Specialty Sales company a new idea seems to have been put into operation. Judging from all appearances their plan has met with favor and while they have only been established about thirty days they seem to be doing a flourishing business.

G. W. Brownee, general manager of the new company, and who was formerly a local city salesman, is the originator of the new idea. He has associated with him J. S. Launus as sales manager and C. B. Whipple as secretary and treasurer.

Mr. Brownee gives the following outline of the nature of the new company's business:

"Our plan is new. We are not merchandise brokers and do not carry stock. We are simply a company of salesmen working in the combined interests of the manufacturer, broker and jobber, receiving our revenue from the manufacturer. We have an office at 706 Silver building but make our headquarters with the retail grocers of Atlanta, reporting at the office only at intervals to obtain new samples, make up reports, etc.

"SALES PROBLEMS.
Manufacturers have always had their sales problems. So many changes have come about, however, in the last several years that their sales problem has become one of absorbing interest to them. The gradual increase in competition in all lines is no doubt their greatest obstacle, yet there are many reasons why the manufacturer has found that if he would make his own salesman he must employ his own salesman to do the work of popularizing his brand. He can no longer depend on the jobbing salesman to show preference in his favor, because the majority of the jobbing salesman now work on percentage basis and as one brand pays about the same profit as another it is only natural for him to solicit orders for the brands that show the least resistance, and no one can blame him for doing so, not even his own employer.

"This cannot be considered a reflection on his sales ability, but is merely mentioned to show the natural consequences of the changes that have taken place. The general idea (and it is a good one) with the manufacturer is that the best way to popularize his goods is to not only advertise them, but to give them liberal distribution with the retail trade.

"CUSTOMARY METHOD.
The customary method employed in securing this distribution is to send specialty salesmen into Atlanta to work the retail trade. Generally this is done through the aid of the local city salesman, but for the same reason mentioned above specialty salesmen do not receive the support they once did from local salesmen, and agents, who do not blame the local salesman, but blame the specialty salesman who is a nice business—but to what advantage?

"AFTER RESULTS.
After they are through with Atlanta they pull out for another town and scarcely before their tracks are cold here comes along a competitor who roots his lines out. It has therefore been demonstrated that the manufacturer cannot firmly establish his brands by spasmodic and irregular work, and that the only solution to the problem is to keep salesmen regularly on the trade until results are satisfactory.

"Their present system of working the trade as outlined above is very expensive and not productive of the best results, and if each manufacturer separately were to maintain an individual salesman to work the trade in the interests of his line alone that method also would be expensive and right here is where our company steps into their line.

"We work a combination of manufacturers' lines jointly, limited of course in number and non-competition, and work the trade regularly and systematically, following up introducing work until the goods are on the market to way. In this way the manufacturers' selling cost is cut to less than half and yet receive the same support. Retail merchants like our plan for the reason that they can take on our lines knowing they will not die out on their hands, but will become popular sellers with them, and again since they are dealing with salesmen they have known for years. Our work is confined strictly to retail grocery trade, and we represent only high grade goods.

"We are receiving liberal support from retail grocers and city salesmen who realize our business will benefit them as well as the manufacturers.

the dishes when they were prepared, he said, the whites of his eyes showing in his anxiety to avoid trouble.

"Read de sign boss. Hit says meals at dat table 50 cents.

"I don't care what the sign says," I replied, "I'm not going to pay 54 cents for exactly the same things that other people paid 25 cents for, and with that I threw down a quarter on the 50-cent table and left."

"As I went out of the door I could still hear the cook and the waiter saying, as if they were chanting a chorus, 'Moodle at dat table 50 cents.'

"You see the waiter had sized me up and knew that I was neither a farmer nor just a traveler passing through but was a drummer."

GULF CO. ANSWERS "WHY IS ATLANTA?"

District Manager Tells Something of Growth and Outlook of His Company

J. W. Pearce, district sales manager of the Gulf Refining company, thinks that the growth of the Gulf's oil business in the southeastern territory fully answers the question so frequently heard—Why is Atlanta?

This company opened a district office of two rooms in the Candler building seven years ago without a single distributing station and has just moved to the Hurt building, as the best part of a floor is required for its offices.

Territory covered from the Atlanta to the Gulf of Mexico, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina, and the company has close to one hundred stations in the leading cities and towns of these four states, and expects to add to this number during the present year.

The Gulf Refining company is the largest independent oil concern in the world, controlling its own production in the mid-continent and gulf coast fields as well as Mexico, and operating upwards of a thousand miles of pipe lines and in addition to its mammoth refineries it operates a large fleet of oil tankers and barges, distributing in this district its products at coast points in Florida largely by its own specially constructed boats—each of these boats being served by a lighter with her own power in the Mexico, and of independent steamships operated by pipelines, or by a capacity of thirty-two inches, thus enabling her to make practically all points on the inside passage.

Asked for an explanation of the remarkable expansion and success of the Gulf Refining company, Mr. Pearce believed that service, products of uniform superior quality, and particularly the prestige of "that great gulf gasoline" explained the matter.

ROBINSON SHOWS 50 PER CENT INCREASE

The A. M. Robinson company, jobbers of dry goods and overall and shirt business, state that their April business, for which the total figures have just been gathered, is 50 per cent ahead of last year.

This increase is partly due to the sales representative of the new department the company has recently added.

In Atlanta Friday from a Southeast Georgia trip and will be in this city during the big Shriners' celebration.

C. M. McKnight, of Jones Brothers & Co., who has been in the city for his company's products at Atlanta, Ga., took orders for last week secured on another carload at Millen, Ga., from the Millen Grocery company.

F. H. Baker, of the Gramling-Spalding road staff, is reported by his firm to be securing an excellent business in the vicinity of Albany, Ga., where he has been working for the last ten days.

Nat Gunter, who greets the house customers at the Ragan-Malone Co., is back on his regular job again after a series of special trips in Northeast Georgia. He is said to have sold 'em to the road like a veteran of the grip.

Russ Bates, J. K. Orr and J. B. Overton are Shriners of the Orr Shoe Company and are all ready to forget those next week.

If it was an Elker week ahead instead of a Shriners' week the Dougherty-Little-Rodney company would be well represented. Several of the travelers for this house are members of the S. P. O. E.

J. G. Eddy is here for the week ready to extend the glad hand to his merchant friends. He is the Myrtle Shriners noble of the M. C. Kiser sales force.

"Uncle Walt" Benson was missing from the group of week-enders from the M. C. Kiser company on a short trip to southeast Alabama. He is a fact that strikes anyone who sees him.

very forcibly when he is seen. He is seening him loom up against the landscape. With his feet and his hands, he fills in a good bit of the scene.

J. P. Armstrong, now on the Georgia road a month for the Hilday-Williamson-Wright company is making a good start with this firm. He is well accepted in that territory and is expected to be there for three years for the Flays-Leban company.

Sport fans who are of the prominent Atlanta Shriners will be on duty Sunday and Monday night at the Union station as a member of the reception committee from Yarnall Temple, who will welcome the visitors.

P. S. Brownlee, of the E. L. Adams company reports the heavy sale of corn and cotton crops in his territory are in splendid shape for this season of the year.

A. J. Bruce, representing Thomas J. Linton's tea and coffee, was a visitor Saturday at Palm & Stamps.

Russ Bates, the Red Seal shoe salesman, is counting on a considerable number of merchants from his territory visit Atlanta next week, and is here making preparations to entertain them.

Thirteen doesn't seem to be an unlucky number for Percy Harris, the A. M. Robinson company traveler. In the thirteen days just ended he has totaled sales of fourteen thousand dollars, according to figures given by his company. A part of this heavy run of business is new cloth.

All of the Robinson salesmen are declared to be doing well with this new part of their line.

Neal W. Keefe, the "Ketchup Kid," was a visitor at Palm & Stamps Saturday. Mr. Keefe represents the Burt Olney canned food products of which Palm & Stamps are wholesale distributors. Mr. Keefe will be in Atlanta six weeks working the trade with the Palm & Stamps salesman.

His "Ketchup Kid" the cotton goods mill agent, is himself again as far as health is concerned, having entirely recovered from his recent illness. Some of his friends would not recognize him very quickly, however, except for his 300-pound size. He has dispensed with those flowing mustaches.

J. S. Cohen, of the Red Seal shoe selling force, came in from the road yesterday in his usual good humor.

C. P. Phillips, southern representative of the Ohio Match company, was visiting Palm & Stamps Saturday, which firm are distributors for his company's products.

C. H. Williamson, Birmingham representative of Burt Olney, came off food products, was a visitor Saturday at Palm & Stamps. It is not known whether he came over from Birmingham to meet Mr. Keefe, another representative here of the Olney company or to see the Shriners' parade or, being from Birmingham, to watch the raising of Atlanta's pennant at the ball park Saturday.

Among the visitors last week at the Lamar & Rankin Drug company were the following: Dr. A. R. Scott, M.D.; Donough, Ga.; Paul Selman, Douglasville, Ga.; Dr. M. T. Marchman, Waco, Tex.; Dr. F. W. White, Floyville, Ga.; Dr. Power, Roswell, Ga.; Dr. J. C. Weaver, Winder, Ga.; Dr. J. B. Weldon, Woodville, Ala.; Dr. B. Bowdoin, Adairville, Ga.; C. C. Hutcheson, Comer, Ga.; H. J. L. White, of the A. M. Robinson company sales staff, returned Friday from a short trip to southeast Alabama.

D. C. Fowler, city salesman for the Capital City Tobacco company, is reported to be slowly improving. He is at the Wesley Memorial hospital with a mild fever.

J. M. Alexius, who is the Shriners of the Capital City Tobacco company, is reported to be here for the big time this week.

Chris Iry, the A. M. Robinson company salesman, is reported to be on the road Friday that he is expected to be in Atlanta during Shriners week. There should be some trade developing from this territory.

J. L. Hixon, with the Dougherty-Little-Rodney company, has just finished his first visit of several weeks to his house and is now on his way back to South Georgia. He has been having a big business recently.

There was a movement of the salesmen of Montford Brothers last week that concerned the affairs of that firm, with the coming of the Shriners in the affairs of Atlanta, only the Montford travelers were going and not coming. Practical-ly the entire force, after about a week at headquarters, returned to their territories with a new line of samples and enthusiasm. The Montford firm are to soon start their campaign after orders for school supplies.

At Swann, the shoe salesman, has been all for several weeks but is now able to be up and about, though he is not yet well enough to return to his work. He is one of the veterans of the road and all the members of the traveling fraternity will be glad to see him back on the road again.

The April business of Jones Brothers & Co. was nearly double that of April a year ago. The company has been enjoying a steadily increasing business since its establishment in Atlanta a little over two years ago.

Rice & Hutchins Atlanta company, is getting away to a flying start. Not only has Mr. Stone booked a large volume of good future orders, but his shipments in the month of April were considerably larger than the houses have ever shipped into this territory in this month. He thinks this is doing mighty well, considering that it is only the second month Mr. Stone has been in this territory.

E. G. Thomas, president of the Rice & Hutchins Atlanta company, is in Boston to attend the semi-annual meeting of the Rice & Hutchins company and factory men to design styles and order samples for the spring and summer season of 1914.

The McCord-Stewart company report a handsome increase in their April business over April last year.

With the coming of April, S. I. Bagwell, of the H. L. Singer company, has purchased a new outfit. It is stated that the outfit that Mr. Bagwell is not only prepared to keep his own lawn trimmed, but also to perform efficient work for others desiring such service.

W. R. Simpson, of Jones Brothers & Co., orders last Wednesday at Athens, Ga., for a carload of his company's pickles and preserves.

J. L. Singer, of the H. L. Singer company, spent several days last week visiting the trade with the city salesmen of his company, presenting the merits of Sweet Violet brand of canned goods. He met with large success and aided in placing a big volume of orders for Sweet Violet goods.

Every salesman connected with the Rice & Hutchins Atlanta company had a handsome increase in sales for the month of April over the same month last year, several of the men more than doubling their sales. The outlook for the month of May is equally bright and every man is confidently expecting to get in the hundred per cent increase class this month.

The Rosenfield family, the Atlanta house furnishings jobbers, have just secured the agency for a novelty on which they expect to have a heavy business. The Rosenfield family are the proprietors of the company have already been supplied with samples.

Just this question: Do you believe in building up your own section?

Nothing has more to do with helping YOU than the increase in number and strength of the factories in your community--within your reach.

Then-go to work to be a CONSTRUCTIVE merchant--for your own sake.

The first step in construction is co-operation.

Experiences of Australia, New

Here are pictures
made by Mr.
Clarke. The tomb of Cecil Rhodes is at the top. Others are scenes in Egypt

AFTER traveling into remote parts of the world in search of photographs for moving pictures, W. F. Clarke, who was an officer in the British army during the Boer war, has made his home in Atlanta.

He has with him an album which tells in pictures of his journeys through Africa, Arabia, Egypt, Australia, New Zealand, New Guinea and China. Always these travels were undertaken to photograph the lonely parts of the earth. In his office in the Hurt building he told last week of his experiences. Five points was only a block off, but here in the midst of everydayness and unadventurous business, he was describing Cecil Rhodes' tomb which is on top of a bleak African hill and was pointing to a photograph which is the picture of lonely grandeur; he was telling of a real coronation he prepared for King Barwon, of the Barwon blacks; and was mentioning the vile liquor he had to drink with Australian natives and how it went to his head.

as though it were opium.

Through the window trickled familiar noises from Edgewood avenue as he leaned over and laid his finger on the open book of photographs.

"This," he explained, "is where they had a 'Vernin Drive' in South Africa.

Slain by Baboons. "They round up all the beasts they can—the small ones particularly—and kill off the lot. A planter had been slain by baboons. They had been eating his crops, and he had bagged one. The others—see, may think this strange, but it's true—waited for him, ambushed the fellow, just as though they were human, and dashed out his brains with heavy rocks. "That bagged the Drive. Five thousand diggers were collected, 100 white men, and the negroes, forming in a circle, began to close in on a koppe—hill, you know—driving the beasts before them. I took my place on top, with a fire built round to keep the creatures off, and set up my camera. "I can't picture the sight to you,

It began to storm. Lightning struck the rocks on the hillside. Beasts of all kinds, howling, shrieking, fighting among themselves, scrambled up the hill with natives behind them. It was like a glimpse of the other world.

"Then, one of my boys touched my arm. 'There's a lion outside the ring,' he said. We left the machine and picked up our guns. There was the beast not three yards beyond the ring. We shot him; and, well, after that we went back and took some more pictures."

He pointed to a photograph of the Congo country. After the Boer war, in which he served as a lieutenant attached to the Light Horse—having been born in Yorkshire, England, he took naturally to the cavalry—Mr. Clarke went up the Congo to the great rubber plantations, thinking to get pictures of the natives who were being treated at that time with a cruelty that was arousing indignation the world over. There began his wandering in search of "moving pictures." It carried him here, there, everywhere, back to England, then to America. Finally he landed in New York, intending to see Mexico, but, changing his plans, came here to make his home. Mr. Clarke turned back to the picture of Cecil Rhodes' tomb, the first in his picture album, and started at the beginning of his adventures. This picture is one that shows a bare hill-like the top of the world and makes you fancy that if the rocks were pushed they would roll off into space.

He selected another picture, and reached the story of King Barwon who had a coronation prepared for him, by moving pictures.

Mr. Clarke was in Australia, then, and news came down to the coast that the blacks had chosen a new ruler and were about to induct him into office. It was a chance for a feature film suited to the moving picture houses. Here in the uttermost part of Australia the blacks were having a coronation of their own, as interesting in its way as the crowning of King Edward in London.

He set out with his picture machine, went four days by train, ten days by horseback, and on a scorching bright morning when the sun seemed to fill half the sky a village loomed up on the horizon, and he had reached the journey's end.

King Barwon's Coronation. Then, he made a discovery. The prime minister told him. The Blacks crowned their king by dropping a rusty chain round his neck that might have been used as a plow-line in Georgia before the war. And that was all.

Anyone else, would have smashed the camera, spoken bitterly to the prime minister, and started home. Mr. Clarke got out the tobacco, pocket knives, and other such valuables in his kit, called in the managers who had charge of the king-making affair, and arranged that precedent or no precedent, King Barwon was to have a coronation worthy of a ruler.

He wrote a sort of scenario of the event, drilled all the chief characters, directed the decoration of the village and, well, they are talking to this day of that event up in the country of the Barwon blacks and all Europe together with America saw the pictures and wondered at the picturesque ceremony of the Australian savage.

That country, as Mr. Clarke said, is all red sand, unutterably hot, alive with insects, and made particularly uncomfortable by a leech that drops on the back of your neck and burrows under the skin.

But now we skip to New Guinea. He had joined a party going up the Fly river, and after turning away from the river, they found themselves lost. For weeks they lived chiefly on wild fruits, and for two or three days at a time were without water.

In this extremity they struck up with a party of natives—more dwarfs, fellows with sharp chins, hair growing down on their hands, and a disposition to kill anyone whose skin looked white.

But presents soothed their harsh tempers, and finally they came to be friends, even so much so that a banquet was prepared for the strangers.

"We all sat round a huge stone pot," explained Mr. Clarke. "In it they boiled a filthy stuff, a black liquor that turned you sick to look at. Four old hags began to dance round the pot and spit into it. The men rose and began to dance, too. "Suddenly, the stuff was dished up in cups and handed round among us. We feared to refuse it. But we sipped as little as possible. And, yet, the fumes were enough to go to your head. I have never known anything to have such a violent effect. Everything turned dark; and, hours later, when we came to ourselves, natives

GOLDEN CITY OF THE SOUTH AMERICA

INDIAN WOMEN SELLING POTATOES IN THE MARKET

By Frank G. Carpenter
(Copyrighted 1914.)

I AM in Cuzco, once the famed capital of the Incas, and now by all odds the most interesting city of modern Peru. It lies here in the heart of the Andean plateau, about 500 miles by rail from the Pacific ocean at the port of Mollendo, and so far inland that with the changes of trains, it takes almost four days to reach it. The cars cross the Andes at a pass that is several hundred feet higher than the top of Pike's peak, and then drops down to a plateau that has the same altitude as the snows which kiss the sky on the summit of Fujiyama, the sacred mountain of Japan. You travel over this plateau for about 200 miles, and then enter a beautiful valley about 1,000 feet lower. The plateau is covered with grass, and is spotted with the thatched mud huts of countless Indians of the Incas descendants. It has good pastures and upon it are feeding flocks of thousands of sheep and great flocks of alpacas and llamas. It has small cultivated patches here and there, but its general aspect is one of a garden.

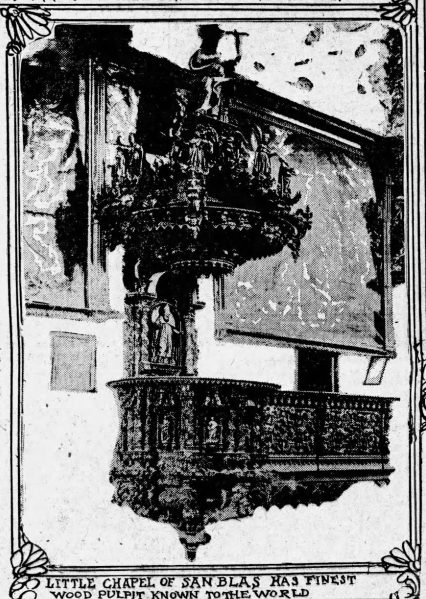

The valley has a different appearance. It seems like a Garden of Eden as you descend from the pampas. There are great fields of grain and acres of potatoes and beans. There are patches of quinnas and tracts of green barley, which just now are sprinkled with the yellow blossoms of the mustard that has grown up among it. This land belongs to the hacendados, or the white half-breed Peruvians. It has some large houses, but everywhere scattered through the farms are Indian villages, and the mud huts, the homes of the laborers. Some of the fields are surrounded by the fences of stone or mud walls, and many of them are in terraces that rise, step by step, from the valley, high up the slopes of the mountains. There are some pastures, and everywhere are beautiful wild flowers. The country looks fertile, rich and well kept. There are cattle and sheep and alpacas, all eating together and when they are watched over by Indian herdsmen, while forming a picture of prosperity that is accentuated by the poverty of the highlands from which you have descended.

It is at the head of this beautiful valley that Cuzco is situated. It lies on the slope of the mountain, and as you stand above it on the site of the old fortifications built by the Incas this great fertile tract looks very different before you.

It is probable that it was this sight that made the first Inca king, Manco Capac, choose Cuzco as the capital of his nation. He came here some 400 years before Columbus discovered America, and the empire he founded was already four to six centuries old, when it was conquered and destroyed by the Spaniards. Pizarro, according to tradition it had been founded by a race that was descended from the child of the sun, who came to rest on an island in Lake Titicaca. A prince and princess of this race were given a golden rod, and were told to go forth and civilize the savages which then inhabited the valley of the Andes. They were told to select as the site of their city where the rod should sink into the earth. As the story goes, they traveled across the pampas over much the same route that I came by, and when they reached here the golden rod fell and disappeared in the earth.

On that spot was established the chief plaza and about it grew up ancient Cuzco. Whether the story is true or not, it is certain that here the Incas built a great city, the capital of their empire, that reached two or three thousand miles into the interior. The Incas dominions took in what is now the city of Quito, in Ecuador, and extended to the far below where now stands Santiago, the capital of Chile. Cuzco itself then contained over two hundred thousand inhabitants and the people ruled from it were numbered by the tens of millions. They were by far the most civilized of all South American peoples, and it is a question whether they were not more advanced than the Aztecs. They constructed wonderful buildings with temples and palaces and great fortifications, the ruins of which I shall describe later on.

The Incas knew how to mine gold and silver, and were skillful in the smelting and refining of copper and lead. They had copper tools and they were expert goldsmiths and silver smiths. They took the wild llamas and alpacas of the pampas and tamed them. They made the llamas their beasts of burden, and from the wool of the alpaca they wore all sorts of garments, and beautiful blankets. They made hats and shoes and were skilled in the dyeing of fabrics. These Incas, whose ancestors date back almost to the time of Christ's birth, knew something of astronomy. They observed the equinoxes and the eclipses of the moon and the sun. They had a land system and were skilled in the building of roads. They knew something of arithmetic and made calculations by means of knots of strings of different colors. They had musical instruments like some that their descendants play upon today, and it is said that they had songs of love-making, and even plays and a drama. The Incas cultivated first the valley of Cuzco, and from there spread their rule over the whole of Peru. They swarmed out over the plateau, and today you can see the terraces they made not only here and there, but all through the wide valley that lies between these lofty mountains from Ecuador far down into Peru. They cultivated tens of thousands of square miles of the high mountain slopes, that have since gone to waste, but which are marked by the stone walls they built to hold in the earth. It is on the site of the ancient capital of this nation that I am writing this letter.

The Cuzco of today is not more than one-tenth the size it was when Pizarro first saw it. It has now about 20,000, and it is more like a city of old Spain built during the days of Columbus than the magnificent capital of Atahualpa, the Inca king. The town is made of one, two and three-story buildings of stone or adobe covered with plaster. The streets are narrow, and the houses have walls of bright colors; they are all close to the sidewalks, and the narrow streets paved with rough cobblestones. There are not more than twenty or thirty feet wide, and from above you see many of them with their terraces of light red tiles that sparkle under the blue sky and bright sun of the Andes. High above the houses, however, and all over the city rise the domes and spires of the great churches and convents built by the Spaniards, who they had grown rich by enslaving the Indians and taking the vast hoards of silver and gold they found in their capital. Cuzco has a church for every thousand inhabitants, and some of them are so magnificent that they would attract attention in any country of Europe. Right in the center of the town is a beautiful plaza cut out of what was once the chief central square of the Incas. Its area is now not more than four or five acres; but five churches face upon it, including the Cathedral of Cuzco, which covers several acres. That building has a church on one side, and just across the way is the great structure of La Compania, which was built by the Jesuits as their chief house of worship. Adjoining this building is the old Jesuit convent, a magnificent structure where the monks worked and taught. This was taken by the government when it drove the Jesuits out, and it has been turned into a university. The great patio about which the holy fathers strolled is now used as a tennis court, and I saw the students there playing, driving the ball over the net when I passed through. Another great church is La Merced, whose interior is one mass of carving, including fluted stone columns, and a ceiling of cedar in panels, exquisitely done. Here my guide was a young priest, whom I met in the cathedral. He was then the Church of Santo Domingo, that stands on the foundation of the old Temple of the Sun of the Incas, and that of San Francisco, whose tower is the most famous relic of the Incas. The little chapel of San Blas has the finest wood pulpit known in the world. It is one mass of carving done by the descendants of the Incas, and is so beautiful that $25,000 was recently offered for it.

The Cathedral of Cuzco is perhaps the richest of all the Catholic churches on the South American continent. It is a vast museum of carvings, plated with gold, of wonderful paintings, some of which were made by the old masters, and of chapels whose altars are solid silver, and whose woodwork is plain, while attending to business. Many of them have some manufacturing in order to their selling. They have little hand-sewing machines are by Marlo, one is by Vandrey and several are by Domenech. One of the altars was presented by Charles V of Spain and some of the paintings were given by Philip II.

I went into the sacristy. This is a museum of antique carving and painting, and in one of the walls is a vault filled with treasures, including gold, silver and precious stones. The total value is said to be more than $1,000,000, and a large part of this is made up by what is known as the custodia, a box that contains the sacrament at the times of procession. This box of solid gold. It weighs thirty-six pounds and it was made of gold plates that were taken from the Inca Temple of the Sun. The diamonds and emeralds upon it are worth more than the gold itself. These treasures are stored away in a closet, with a door of wrought iron, so rude that it could be opened by any safe-breaker or common United States burglar. It is perhaps the reverence of the people and the fear of damnation that preserve it from theft.

As I stood in the cathedral, a mass was being celebrated. Two hundred women, dressed all in black, with black shawls over their heads, knelt on the stone floor. There were perhaps twenty men scattered over the church, and through them all were patches of color made by the Indians who wore ponchos of red, blue, or yellow and whose bare feet were turned up to the roof. There were also Indian women in short skirts and red shawls, some of whom had packs on their backs and not a few of whom had babies.

Leaving the cathedral, I took a stroll through the city. I first visited the portales or stores selling Indian goods. These run along the opposite side of the plaza facing the cathedral. They take up the ground floors of a block of two-story houses, the upper stories of which extend out over the street and are upheld by stone columns, forming an arcade, where the busy clad customers walk or stand as they shop. The stores are like the houses, and the single floor which ways look as though they were cut out with a cross-saw. They are of the rectangular shape and the street with the street. The night I arrived, Cuzco was one of the saint's days, and the stores were shut. The stalls of wood that come together like the foot of doors were hung and they took more like stable doors than those of a store. Some of them are four inches thick. All are closed, and kept so with great padlocks of wrought iron.

The next day as I again strolled through these arcades I saw that all of the storekeepers are women. They are fat Cholos who wear very full skirts and who keep their shawls and hats on while attending to business. Many of them have some manufacturing in order to their selling. They have little hand-sewing machines which they rest upon boxes or chairs, and kneeling or sitting on the floor, make the garments that the Indians use.

Going onward, I passed the ancient fountain built by the Incas and watched the people of Indian and mestizo servant filling his jars. This fountain represents a young girl with a figure like a chrysanthemum over her head, on the top of which is a cross. The figure is nude and out of the breasts pour two continuous streams of pure water.

A little farther on I stopped to look at the market. This is held in a plaza about half of which is covered with long galvanized iron sheds upheld by posts. Under the sheds are zinc counters upon which the meat is laid out for sale, and farther over are sheds for vegetables, where the Indian and Cholo women sit on the stones with their wares piled before them. Still further over are sheds for fruits, and in the wide, open spaces out in the open, where the Cholo Indians are eating soup and fried stews cooked over clay or sheet iron stoves while they wait.

In the shed part of the market the women have stalls, each about six feet square. I asked as to the prices and found that eggs are now selling at 24 cents a dozen. Beef costs 7-12 cents a pound and mutton 10 cents, whether it be lamb or old ram. The part of the animal from which the cut comes is not different. You pay the same for a steak cut from the loin or the neck. The butcher women have no scales and they guess at the weight of a piece. Vegetables are not sold by measure, but in piles, and the usual price, per picul, is 6 cents, or 2-12 cents American. Here is a woman selling red peppers. She has a cloth covered with the peppers, and she says for 5 cents per picul. In the next stall are green beans, which contain a handful, and beside them cakes of native cheese the size of a biscuit, that you can buy for a nickel.

A little farther over they are selling quinoa. This is a grain as big as the head of a pin that the Indians use to make bread. It is sold in the picul, each and they cost 2 or 3 cents. The same woman has corn in piles of ten tubbins as long as your finger and also hominy in a cloth looking like an ear of corn. The hominy grains are as big as my thumb nail and about half as thick as my thumb.

I am interested in the potatoes. This is their natural home. The greatest of all our potatoes were born on the high plateau of the Andes. The tubers are of all colors and some are as big as my flat, others the size of a thimble. Some are bright red, others yellow, others black, and some like ones are as pink as the toes of your baby, and not much bigger or smaller. The pink ones are used to make soup.

IN THE CHURCH OF THE MERCEDES IN CUZCO

The corn also is of many colors and as black as your boots. There is a pile of one of bright yellow and the next pile is dark red. The same woman has white chow for sale. By this mean frozen potatoes which have been put over night in the water and then sprinkled and frozen and dried. They will then last for years without spoiling, and are a favorite dish of the Indians. It is interesting to watch the market women. Some of them are Cholos, as you can tell by their straw hats, and their complexion, which are not so dark as those of the Indians. They come almost to the ankles, and have skirts which have a pleated apron over the hips. They also wear shawls of red, blue, or black. They have on embroidered waists and voluminous skirts. A single woman may wear a half dozen skirts, so that her dress stands out as did those of our girls in the days of wire petticoats.

There are Indian men by the hundreds walking about through the market. They are buying and selling, and there are Indian women going about with bundles on their backs and babies on the tops of the bundles. The men have flat round hats, and the women are dressed up all around, and under the hats are caps of bright colors with very flaps, which hang down to their ears. Some of the Indians are driving carry great packs on their shoulders containing vegetables and other wares which they have brought in from the country. The whole scene is one of bright colors, but it is quiet, and the people are gentle and sober. They talk in low tones, and they seem to have the accommodations are better. The food is Peruvian, but the eggs are fresh, and the meat is good. The landlady studies to please, and his price, $1.25 a day for three meals, low. The only trouble is the lack of good lights. Cuzco's only illuminants are candles, and candles are so frequently stumpled over in the way to my room after the first night.

Nevertheless, I am delighted with Cuzco. The sky is so blue, the sun is so bright and the surrounding landscape beautiful. In addition to the quaintness and strange customs of the Incas, there is the romance of the past and the ruins of the Incas. But of these I will write you next Sunday.

In the whole city, and when one goes out to ride he must go horseback, or muleback. In coming in on the train I had the station master with me. He had been instructed by the superintendent of the railroad to see that I got to my hotel, and as I have a great lot of baggage I told him he had better hire a carriage. He replied that there were no carriages in Cuzco, but that he might take the street car and my typewriter and trunks could be carried on the backs of Indian carriers. I found the street car to be a long box resting on wheels, with a team of four shaggy mules as the motor. There were half a dozen such cars, each with its separate team, and they were so crowded that I was barely able to get standing room. The cars run only to the trains, and they arrive and depart three times a week, so that if you can get a car ride a day you are lucky. It was about a mile and a half from the railroad depot to the main plaza, and our mules went on the mules.

Our hotel, the Gasco, is within a half block of the track. It is run on the European plan, and we were able to get two very good rooms at a price of two gold dollars a day. Our meals were taken at the hotel of Senor Pedro Sanchez, which faces the great plaza and the cathedral. The entrance to the house is a very cavelike passageway, through courts which are bad smelling and dirty, and it is only when you reach the dining room that you see to the food from holding your nose. The food is Peruvian, but the eggs are fresh, and the meat is good. The landlady studies to please, and his price, $1.25 a day for three meals, low. The only trouble is the lack of good lights. Cuzco's only illuminants are candles, and candles are so frequently stumpled over in the way to my room after the first night.

Nevertheless, I am delighted with Cuzco. The sky is so blue, the sun is so bright and the surrounding landscape beautiful. In addition to the quaintness and strange customs of the Incas, there is the romance of the past and the ruins of the Incas. But of these I will write you next Sunday.

actual performance by eliminating the prevention of the operator from seeing his plan. Instead of waiting until the task is fully achieved, a task, begins to be completed as the operator sees it, as soon as he has advanced two-thirds of the way to standard completion, and increases the reward toward one as his performance becomes more nearly approached.

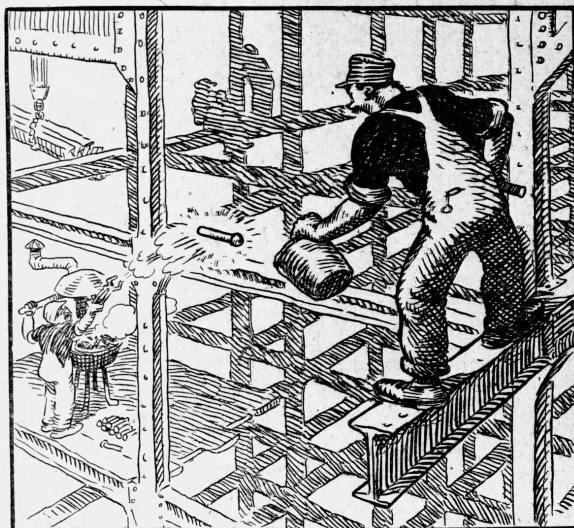

Most important in the Emersonian approach is the concept of the incentive and declaration that efficiency in industrial management does not demand technical or physical sacrifice of the operators along with equal fairness, practical principles—ideals, fair dealing, wise and humane treatment of the worker, and self and always and above all superior common sense.

Last, but by no means least is the interesting, see the theories and principles dependent chiefly on psychology and the human factor in the computer-mitree system of Charles U. Carpenter. In both of these, with almost no exception, the operator is rewarded with little or no change in equipment, and perhaps none whatever in the nature of the work itself. The power it takes to increase the efficiency of operators are given a new meaning, and the operators are given their responsibility and their reward.

MR. DOOLEY On the Pursuit of the Rich

BY FINLEY PETER DUNNE

"I see wan fellow ketchin' red hot iron bolts in a bucket instead iv with his hands."

"A stovepipe hat is a challenge to a brack and ought on'y to be seen in public with other stovepipe hats."

"O, Th' poor, poor things," said Mr. Dooley. "Th' poor, misundherstood craters. May hivin' f'give me fr'm crooly to thin in th' past."

"What ar-re ye talkin' about?" asked Mr. Hennessy. "Th' street sweepers?" "I'm talkin' about a far more onforchinit class. I'm talkin' about th' hardships that are suffered be th' rich at th' hands iv th' rest iv us. Do ye know, I niver give it a thought befor. I did not hear th' cry iv distress fr'm th' intervier iv th' automobile. I was too absorbed in th' selfish struggle iv life to think iv th' torn heart that bled behind th' fur lined overcoat, or to listen to th' sobs that come fr'm th' directors' room iv th' national bank. But this mornin' I read something that changed me mind. It was an article be a rich man in Boston—an' a good man he is, too, an' as honest an' brave as though he didn't have a coat to his back. If I was him, faith, it's little I'd trouble meself about what th' proletaryat thought about me. I'd set with me foot coked up in front iv me plate glass window with a good tin cuit set-gar stickin' out over me eye, an' wiled a proletaryat put out his tongue at me I'd call th' family an' say: 'Hurry up, childer, an' see th' funny faces a man outside is makin'.'"

"But me frind in Boston looks at it in a different way. He's tur-rily worried about it. He says th' poor ought to sympathize with th' rich an' extend him th' hand iv good fellowship, after wipin' off th' same on th' pants. He says that many a gin'rous heart bates in th' palace iv th' millionaire. An' mind ye, he knows what he's talkin' about. He's no amachoor investigator. He belongs to a down-throdden class that he's speakin' fr'. He is tellin' about his own actual experiences an' those about him in th' purlyous iv Commonwealth avnoo. He has spint his whole life among them an' shared their privations. He knows what it is to stay hours an' hours in th' gloomy cellar iv a safety deposit vault, sawin' off th' stiff an' rebellious coupon. He has faced th' rigors iv many a stockholders' meetin', an' has the cold iv th' house, he private car atin' th' course food provided be th' nuygur cook an' goin' without a bath. An' to us proud an' comfortable poor people he comes with outstretched hands an' pleads fr' what, says ye? Fr' sympathy, fr' justice fr' th' rich."

"Boys," he says, "give us a chance. Don't be hard on us because we are rich. Ye may be rich ye'vesill some day, though I doubt it. It is not our fault that we are afflicted be nature with superiour strenth, industry, an' nobility iv character. Be kind to ps. Stop attackin' us," he says. "Do not turn us away fr'm th' dure just because we have a mortgage on th' house," he says. "We are men like ye'vesill, though, iv course, cast in a finer mold, which is why we have so much iv th' loose change," he says."

"In a gin'ral way, Hinnessy, this is th' prayer iv th' spokesman iv th' strugglin' masses that soon will be handin' in 6 per cent on their incomes. It brought tears to me eyes, an' there an' thin I med up me mind niver again to turn a millionaire away with empty hands. But there is more to th' article thin just an appeal to our hearts. Th' Boston gentelman tells why some people ar-re poor an' others ar-re rich. What I here instead iv ridin' in an autyomobill, an' ar-re consumin' a chimbley iv lager instead iv broochin' a keg iv sherry wine, is that ye ar-re so lazy that ye will only do enough wurruk to give ye food an' shelter. Afther that's done ye do not go on, but indolently faint fr'm exhaustion. Me frind fr'm Boston if he had th' gift iv language th' way I've got it wud put it this way:

"Most people ar-re lazy an' th' why they're poor. I can think iv no other raisin at prisint excipt they haven't got th' gumption aither. Idleness an' poverty go hand in hand. I was struck with this while lookin' out iv a window iv th' Grand Palace hotel an' watchin' some dawdlin' iron wurrukers engaged in puttin' up a buildin' fr'me. I see wan fellow ketchin' red hot iron bolts in a bucket instead iv with his hands, which wud've been more expeditious. I observed that this happy idler quit his so-called employment at 12 o'clock sharp an' did not come back till nearly wan. Also he did not shin up to his job as a f-inancier wud if his bank was up there, but lazily waited till he cud be histed thirty-five stories on a steel beam. I am told that many iv this class put in some iv th' best hours iv th' night in sleep. It's th' likes iv thin that listens to th' appeals iv reckless agytators against th' rich. Great fortunes ar-re a blessing to th' country. They're like a reservoir that nature has established fr' storing large quantities iv th' roly bol iv havin' it lyin' around in small puddles in front iv ivrybody's durestep."

"Th' govermint proticts th' forests; why shudden't it proticet a gr-reat fortune an' keep people fr'm cuttin' into it? Take me frind Jawn D's large thracts iv coin-bearin' vegetation, much iv it vargin growth that has niver been touched by th' tax iv th' inhruder. Be rights th' govermint ought to make this a reservation an' give people th' privilege to picnic in it, but not to carry anything away. Maybe they might have a license to shoot wan reformer each, in th' season. Iv course it wud not be right to let them go further an' kill off all th' reformers who infest this splindit fortune an' make it inthrestin' to nachralsists, an' speyal care shud be taken not to destroy th' philanthropists who live there an' ar-re quite tame an' harmless an' consume on'y th' small vegetation. An' th' prisidint wud be well advised if he appointed Jawn D. head forester. As a private individool he has done pretty well in protectin' th' property, but he might be even more useful if he was a govermint officer with a suitable salary an' had th' right to shoot interlopers," he says."

"An' there ye are. I will scorn th' rich no longer. I will blend me tears with theirs over th' tyrannical income tax blark, an' whin me congressman inthrojoces a bill to cut down th' tariff on overshoes will raise me hand an' cry: 'Have ye no pity?' But, iv course, if us two philanthropists are goin' to get th' wurruk back to this hall-fellow-well-met basis th' rich must do their share. They must not indulge their ivvy iv th' poor. They must not be too sensitive to th' scorn iv th' penniless or take their own condition too much to heart. It won't do anny good fr' them in their impatience to turn arrychists an' threaten to stop makin' money unless we keep persecutin' them. Let them follow their importance in savin' us fr'm th' trouble iv gatherin' th' gilt so that we can spend all our time at frivolous jobs as plumbers, bricklayers, an' th' like."

Th' cow'd slave I pass him by, I dare be rich fr' a' that. Fr' a' that, an' a' that, their overalls an' a' that, th' shovels but th' idler's stamp, We've got th' stuff fr' a' that."

"An' besides, if I'll help me frind fr'm Boston to feel any better about th' wurruk, I'd tell him that th' poor don't hate th' rich. I take ye, Hinnessy, as a ripresentative iv that arrogant class an' beyant hearin' ye want or twist with that Andrew Carnegie wud choke till he divided with ye, I niver see anny signs that ye wud get anny more enjoyment out iv attackin' a rich man thin a stockholder in a New England railroad. Iv course it's nachral to have a brick at a stovepipe hat, but ye don't leave it at th' main under th' hat, but at th' hat itself. A stovepipe hat is a challenge to a brack. It cocks itself defiantly over th' ear iv its owner an' says: 'I ripresent intelligence, varchue, industry, an' thrift, an' that canbeen iv ye's stands fr' shiflessness an' indolence an' sthrong drink. Th' gr-reat heater, Nature, designed me to boss all other bonnets, an' I must accept th' responsibility.' An' thin comes th' brack. A stovepipe hat ought on'y to be seen in public with other stovepipe hats."

"Hate th' rich? Sure, we haven't got th' time. Whin we're wurruk we're too busy, an' whin we've quit wurruk we're too tired to think about them at all. Whin I've been alone in this place an' there was nawthin' else worth me givin' me mind to, I've often thought about money. An' I come to th' conclusion that a rich man is a rich man an' a poor man is a poor man, an' a meejum rich man is a meejum rich man, an' that's all there is to it. Ye cud no more make a rich man out iv ye'vesill thin ye cud walk across th' street on a tight rope. Ye haven't got th' brains fr' it. Now, don't get mad. I mane ye haven't got th' kind iv brains fr' it. Ye may have a better kind. I'm not sayin' ye haven't. I'm not sayin' that th' late A. Lincoln didn't have a better brain thin th' late R. Sage. But it was a different kind. Ye've noodle isn't accordin' to th' right model ye'll do no more good thyrin' to turn it into a machine fr' th' manufactory iv coin thin ye wud thyrin' to shovel coal with a paint brush. I have known many a rich man that read his prayer book upside down an' many a man that cud tell ye th' names iv all th' stars, an' th' sky an' cudden't make change fr' a quarter without robbin' himself. Most business is buyin' something fr'm somebody fr' less thin ye think it's worth an' sellin' it to somebody else fr' more thin ye think it's worth. To make th' deal complete there must be a sucker at each end. With th' likes iv us th' sucker is always in th' middle."

"Hate th' rich? Divyle a bit. I may invy thin. But there's lots iv people besides that I invy. I invy Joe Tinker because he's a better shortstop thin I am. But I don't hate him. I might if he prevented me fr'm playin' me little game iv wan-off-cat in a vacant lot. An' so I might hate a fellow if I saw him impty me cash register in his pocket, give me a lecture on the thriftless habits, th' business iv me head an' th' wickedness iv me life, an' go out bangin' th' dure behind him. But if he'll on'y lave me alone to comfort meself with th' thought that th' trouble with me is that in th' raffie I threw a head different fr'm his, I'll let him alone. Listen to reckless agytators? Ye bet I do. I listen to hand-organs too. Does th' gentelman in Boston want to cut me off fr'm me harmless amusements? I listen to th' reckless agytators an' th' organ-grinder with th' same injeyment, but nayther iv them can make a monkey iv me."

"Us light hearted fellows injye th' persecutin' iv th' rich," says he. Iv course we do. An' why not? It's a nachral kind iv poplar amusement. Whin a rich man is sint to jail th' news is read with pleasure, not because anny wan hates th' poor crather. Ye laugh whin ye see a fellow with a high hat on his head an' a dimon in his shirt front prancin' along th' street whistlin' a waltz an' steppin' on a piece iv ice an' goin' up in th' air an' comin' down on top iv his impetuous tile with wan gaiter phted ease be south an' th' other north be west. But ye don't hate him. Not you. Ye may not aven consider th' justice iv his punishment. Ye just laugh, an' th' prouder he is an' th' stiffer he walks th' funnier he falls. But beyant bein' a source iv innocent merrymint, as th' pote says, th' troubles iv th' rich with th' departmint iv justice don't inthrest us."

"If I was a millionaire, which I wud've been if kindly nature hadn't carved me bean th' wrong way, th' la-ad I'd be afraid iv wudden't be th' proletaryat who might give me a lick with his shovell if I bumped him on th' street. No, sir, th' fellow that th' big rich man ought to be scared iv is th' little rich man. He's th' la-ad that all th' laws are made fr' that give th' captain iv industries his bumps. Ye can't tell him that th' reason he ain't rich is because he ain't rich. He can't tell a retail grocer that nature made him a retail grocer, that whin th' order came in fr' another retail grocer nature went to a shelf an' picked him out an' sint him into th' querrid. No, sir, th' little rich man thinks that th' money th' big rich man has is his. He can plint out where a clumsy attempt has been made to rub out his initials on ivry dollar bill. He can identify parts iv his own skin that come away with th' money whin it was ture fr'm him be th' Standard Life company. He is ready to swear that while walkin' down th' street he met Jawn Dough ladin' a dollar that wast was his but disappeared wan dark an' stormy night. He says that th' little pet barked with joy at seein' him an' thried frantically to escape, but Jawn wudden't let him. An' he has Jawn up in court an' th' judge decides that he must go to jail maybe some day, but he can keep th' money."

"They remind me iv a fairy story that me frind Nussbaumer told me. Th' Germans ar-re th' on'y people nowadays that believes in fairies. That's why they are continted to be Germans."

"I don't know whether this fairy story iv Nussbaumer is an' of wan or whether it happened to him or to some wan else, but annyhow it went this way: Wanst upon a time there was a young fellow in Germany that was a college student an' he was busted, which is th' same thing. He was sittin' on his thrunk in his bedroom in th' back iv th' house, next to th' shingles, conthrin' if he could raise th' price iv a fiddle iv Pilsener be sellin' a pome. 'O,' says he to himself, 'I wish I had five hundred dollars yet.' Fritz Onagelt had no sooner made his wish thin he heard a voice at his elbow say: 'What kind iv bills, please, an' turnin' round he saw a fairy that had just throoped through th' skylight without breakin' th' glass. 'Good avenin', ma'am,' says th' poor student. 'What can I do fr' ye?' says he. 'I heard ye'er wish,' says th' fairy, 'an' I'm prepared to get it fr' ye,' says she. 'If ye do,' says Fritz, 'I'll split it with ye,' says he. 'I don't want no commission. I'm not a broker. I'm a good fairy,' says th' vision stiftly. 'An' I don't want ye'er thanks, ayelie. I don't like this business iv raisin' money fr' good fr' nawthin' fellows like ye to spind on dhrink. Me reg'lar jooty is to look after little childer, but th' fairy that has charge iv th' cash department is up now coaxin' Andrew Carnegie to make good a wish iv th' prisidint iv a college, an' I was sint out to attend to ye'er case,' she says. 'Wait here a minyit an' I'll cope back with th' soap,' she says. An' she disappeared through the keyhole."

"In a little while she stepped out iv the wall an' dumped five hundred dollars on th' washstand. 'Here's ye'er wish, an' much good may it do,' says she. 'O, thank ye,' says Fritz, an' he begun to count it over to see that she hadn't hegun out on him. But at that minyit an awful howl came heard downstairs. A woman was yellin': 'Polis! Step thot! I'm roomed! I've been robbed!' 'What's all that?' says Fritz. 'It's ye'er poor landlady, says th' fairy. 'How I pity her,' says she. 'What is she whoopin' about?' says Fritz. 'She's just discovered that she's been robbed iv five hundred dollars, her savin' fr' ten years.' 'D'ye mane to say that ye got this money fr'm that unforchinit woman?' says Fritz."

"Sure, I did," says th' good fairy. 'An' th' on'y way ye can get money is to take it fr'm some wan?' says he. 'How th' blazes else I get it?' says th' good fairy. 'Do ye think I'm goin' to make money fr' ye an' have th' United States govermint after me fr' th' rest iv me life? If I'd had time an' ye wasn't in so much iv a hurry I wudden't have touched th' ol' lady so hard, but wud've spread ye'er wish over enough people so no wan wud've felt it much,' says she."

"An' she melted away. Nussbaumer didn't tell me what Fritz done about it. Maybe he was good natured enough to return th' dough to th' landlady, an' maybe she was thankful enough not to complain on him to th' polis. An' maybe after Fritz had kept complyin' long enough with th' money to feel that it was his he put it in his pocket an' walked downstairs an' said to th' landlady: 'Me good woman, ye shud accuston ye'vesill to th' station in life that nature intinded fr' ye. If ye ar-re poor it is because ye ar-re lazy an' ign'rant, it must be plain to ye that gr-reat wealth such as mine is due entirely to superiour intelligence, sobriety, an' thrift. Honest poverty is not to be despised, but is. However, wealth has its responsibilities which it cannot neglect, an' sein' ye'er distress is so great, I will write to th' Society fr' Charity to send somebody around with a lorgnette to look into ye'er case,' he says. 'Here, cabman, drive me to th' Kaiserhof,' he says."

"D'ye think a man can make money an' be kind?" asked Mr. Hennessy.

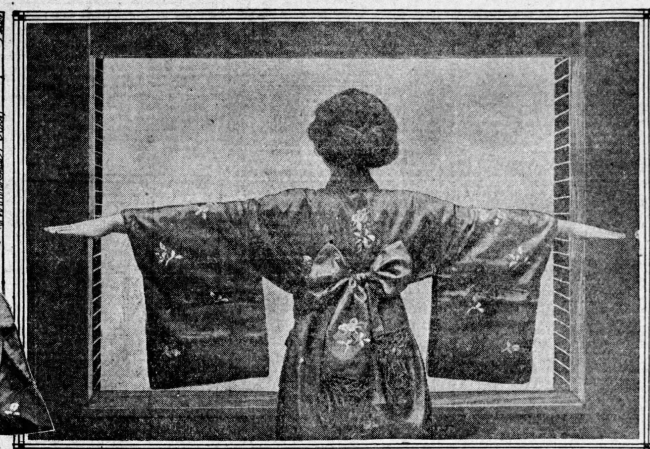

"Sure, he can," said Mr. Dooley. "But he'll have to have two sets iv office hours."

CONCERNING HEALTH and BEAUTY

By MRS. HENRY SYMES

A LESSON FROM JAPAN

Stand Before an Open Window

Beginning the Bending Exercise

WHEN weight and health are equal, the Japanese woman, the peer of the men of her country in strength and physique, is the ideal of the world. This comes from the stress placed upon equal terms with the men in athletics. The women devote fully as much time to exercises and the training of strength as do the men. When quite young, the little girls and boys are given the same athletic tasks to accomplish, and enter the arena with the boys as equals. Certainly they have proved their fitness to do so. When grown, men and women practice together, and the strength of wives and sisters frequently equal that of their men.

With our American women the back is usually the weakest part, but this is not so of the Japanese woman. It has been said of Japan's women that they are molded as perfectly and have as true proportions as those of the women of ancient Greece.

Our Japanese slayers have learned a great vital fact in connection with their bending, the need of quantities of fresh air and of deep breathing. They rise upon fresh air as a cleansing, invigorating bath, and consider it just as important, perhaps even more so, than the frequent outside bath. An examination of the muscles of the Japanese women's abdomen will reveal a firmness that times only good from deep breathing, not mechanically but systematically. Spasmodically is better than absolutely ignoring the need of the internal air bath, but systematic exercise will frequently give you a bloom of youth that is unspeakable until the music process is tried.

Tuberculosis is almost an unknown disease in the land of corymbanthemum and cherry blossoms, and even the winter cough, which we look upon as almost inevitable, is rare in Japan. It has been said that the Japanese look upon deep breathing as being the most vital function in life, food, although it is necessary, but being so important. They claim, indeed, that exercise is of little value when not accompanied by proper breathing.

Especially when exercising before an open window if it is necessary to protect one's self from draughts, even a warm draught. The Japanese kimono, which comes in silk of rather heavy texture, is just the garb for the purpose. It is so comfortable, and there is no tightness that would confine the muscles or in any way interfere with their full play. The broad obi confines the fold softly to the waist, so that the loose kimono does not get in the way when exercising. It is not, of course, possible for all of us to have kimono of heavy silk, but there are nice soft flannels which will answer the purpose. The thin silk crepe gowns are really not sufficiently heavy when one has little clothing on under them.

The bending exercise is good for both

reducing the abdomen and overcoming constipation. If a short rod or pole is used, it aids one to stiffen the muscles while exercising. This tension is quite necessary for effective exercising. Raise the rod high over the head, tensing the muscles at the first grasp of the rod; then bend slowly forward to the floor, finally touching the floor with the rod. Repeat this ten times after the morning bath.

The side bend makes for grace and slightly reduces the natural width of the waist and hips. It is not now the fashion, I know, to have a small waist, but this exercise will not make the waist wasp-like, and a naturally small waist in a woman is not an undesirable feature, as it eliminates the necessity of lacing, even the slightest bit, which some women unfortunately will do if they think there is too much thickness of the waist. Place the hands upon the hips, feet firmly placed together on the floor, and first relaxing the body there are some few exercises where one must relax, away rhythmically and slowly from side to side. Do not forget that the room in which you exercise must be well ventilated. It was passing an old lady's home one

For Grace

Winter night quite late. I was much interested in its windows. It was evident that those poor, unimpressive old souls had clung to the old-time fear of God's fresh air. In all that vast building there were but two windows open on the sleeping floors, and these but a very few inches. I know one young woman, a mother, who is afraid of fresh air for her little ones, and who, in winter, keeps her bedroom windows tightly closed until morning. Of course, the children have coughs and colds. I know, too, a very progressive mother who all winter long slept on a sleeping porch in a bag. She had seven children, all of whom slept in bags on the porch. The last child was brought out when it was only a weeks old. Such a blooming lot of youngsters you would not find in a month's journey. Before she married this mother was a nurse in a large hospital. Of course, these two cases will not call your attention to extremes. It is generally safe to strike a happy medium. Exerting with a large ball is exhilarating, particularly after the bath in the morning or the afternoon. At night it would be too stimulating. Place some soft cushions or a folded quilt upon the floor and, lying upon the floor and raising the feet above the head, toss the ball with the feet and catch it coming down. This is a popular exercise with the Japanese, and a gymnastic feat which they frequently perform at their exhibitions. Plenty of fresh air, systematic exercise and a determination not to fret about things is one of the best prescriptions for health that I know.

An Exhilarating Exercise

THE RECEPTION GUEST

Has the reception been invited to a reception? Well, naturally place your seat in the drawing room and let it be over some of the important things that must be done by you if you wish to be perfectly at ease. On the cards that you have received the reception there will be stated the hours between which the hostess receives. You are not the only one who is invited to the reception. It would be unreasonable to expect you to be the only one who is invited to the reception. It would be unreasonable to expect you to be the only one who is invited to the reception.

In some instances the hostess announces the name of the guest. But in the majority of receptions this is dispensed with and the guests advance to shake hands with the hostess and if he is invited to the house of a stranger, a visitor, for example, she should be introduced to the hostess. Do not linger for more than a few minutes. It is not expected to stay the entire time at a reception. After greeting the hostess, the guests should be introduced to the hostess. Brooks County the Smoke House of Georgia.

By Edna Cain

QUITMAN, Ga., May 9.—Some years ago at a big public meeting here one of the pioneer farmers said the coat of arms of Brooks county was a pig rampant with a shock of corn and one of ears, on a dark background touched with gold, signifying plenty, with blue sky and gold sunshine. This has been true of Brooks county for half a century and this is why today Brooks county claims the proud distinction of being the smokehouse of Georgia.

During the marketing season now coming to a close 300,000 pounds of bacon produced by Brooks county farmers have been sold here and shipped to all parts of the south. When an army of invasion threatens country an army of defense is rushed to meet the enemy. Next fall the hordes of Mexican toll weevil reach the borders of Brooks a despairing cry will go up from their ranks when they are confronted by thousands of fat pigs.

The other day a man, a city dweller, said: "I don't like the slogan 'Hog and Hominy'; there is something gross about it."

That all depends on the point of view. I have lived in cities myself, slept in dark apartments and bought strange foods from delicatessen stores, and I believe I prefer the grossness of the plenty symbolized by broad acres and old log smokehouses hung full of plump brown hams. The slice of colorless ham bought of the delicatessen store is not even a first cousin to the country ham.

The Epic of the Ham.
Did you ever see a smokehouse full of bacon—or smell it? Did you get to the country road about this time of the year and get along toward dusk the varied fragrance of the evening would be punctuated by the aroma of country ham broiling in some farm kitchen? There is nothing gross about that; it is goodly and delicious and belongs to the harmony of the country life.

I really believe there is a direct and vital connection between country ham and patriotism. I believe that the "live at home" in the sense of being self-supporting are more in harmony with life; the Georgian who has delicate, nut-flavored ham for breakfast must be a better Georgian than he who spends his substance for the coarse, flavorless hams imported from the western pork-barrel.

There is a wholesome virtue in the hams from the country which puts adulterated, doctored hams from foreign counts, hams decorated with bits of sweet potatoes, with corn at the last to give firmness, properly cured and smoked, two weeks in hickory chips and salt, and country hams with the flavor of country wholesomehness, the savor of autumn harvests and the vigor of the hickory head.

Hickory Head Hams.
Brooks county did not start out in a day to produce the surplus of bacon which makes it the biggest ham county in Georgia. The history of the bacon industry is part of the county's history and for fifty years the farmers have been bacon producers. Two or three generations ago a group of pioneers came from the Dutch counts, the Hammers, Groovers, Stanleys and McMillens, and settled at Hickory Head. They were all large producers of bacon, and the raising of corn and bacon has always been part of the county's agricultural program, the farmers doing it as a matter of course. Last year Georgia imported $9,000,000 bushels of corn from other states; Brooks county shipped corn in carload lots to other Georgia counties.

At Hickory Head is one of the farmers' clubs in the south, weeks formed by the pioneers met here and has undoubtedly had much influence on the development of the county. Thirty years ago these farmers began buying ice and using it in saving and curing their surplus meat. The nearest ice supply was in Savannah and the club bought ice there and paid express on it.

James E. Downing, of the bureau of animal industry, United States department of agriculture, says this is a remarkable example of the ingenuity of farmers in developing an adequate cold storage plan on the farms and working it out among themselves. There is nothing else like it in the country.

The first cold storage chamber ever built on a farm was built at Hickory Head about twenty-five years ago for Allen Groover. There are a number of these chambers on Brooks county farms, but the farmer who does not want to go to the expense of building one cures his meat by using ice in a large box. The United States government has recently sent out a bulletin to southern farmers and newspapers telling the story of the Brooks county hams to encourage others in this industry.

A number of the farmers here think nothing of butchering 100 hogs in one day, and they produce from 10,000 to 12,000 pounds of bacon annually. At the last annual meeting of the Hickory Head Farmers club the reports showed the club members killed nearly 3,000 head of hogs. It would be interesting to know if there is another group of thirty farmers in one community in Georgia who own an average of nearly 300 head of hogs each.

On one day during the present season 4,000 pounds of meat was marketed at Quitman.

Georgia Pigs for Georgia People.
These Brooks county hams are shipped to all parts of the south. They are marketed here all through the winter season when a rule the Georgia farmer has nothing to market. The Forest Hill Farms hams sold for twenty-five cents a pound or twenty-two and a half in large shipments. They are the equal of the famous Smithfield hams, which retail at thirty-five cents. A movement is on foot to get to the country road about this time of the year and get along toward dusk the varied fragrance of the evening would be punctuated by the aroma of country ham broiling in some farm kitchen? There is nothing gross about that; it is goodly and delicious and belongs to the harmony of the country life.

Prize hogs raised by Brooks county farmers, who are showing Georgia folk a neglected phase of farming that would add hundreds of thousands of dollars to the state's income demonstrating year after year what Georgia farmers can do raising hogs. They raised enough meat this year to supply the county and they sold a surplus of at least $10,000.

$50,000. One farmer, W. W. Rast, shipped a carload of beef cattle to Richmond, Va., for which he received $1,000.

Georgia is spending $50,000,000 a year for meat alone, most of which comes from the western pork-barrel. Georgia can raise this meat much cheaper than the western states can. Brooks county does it.

lay around on the earth in an utter stupor.

"We gathered our things together and left. We had had enough of it."

He turned the leaves of the album, bearing up shoulders of Edgewood avenue, rustled, and mentioned his wanderings in the New Hebrides, the South Sea Islands, where he met up with cannibal folk, a very kindly people, outwardly; his trip to New Zealand, where he climbed Mt. Cook, which is 17,000 feet high; and finally his expedition into the lumber territory in Northern Australia.

Lost in a Sea of Mud.
He and his party strayed from the road and found themselves lost in the mud of a swamp that seemed to stretch to an endless distance on every hand.

Horses would mire up to their thighs; and, traveling from early dawn till late evening, they could only travel three miles in eight days. When they pulled themselves from that place of mud and mire, and stark lean trees they thanked God for their escape.

The album then turned back to Victoria Falls, gave a glimpse of Zanzibar with photographs that are not merely carelessly taken, but are really artistic, showed the dead beast in the album, "who attacked and killed himself on the morning of the eclipse the sky was so cloudy the phenomenon was not visible."

As you see, disappointments are almost as thick as dangers when you are searching the lonely places for pictures.

The Man-Eater.
Mr. Clarke was member of a party organized to trek through Central Africa. In the night they heard a shrill cry, a native had been carried away by a man-eating lion.

White men of the party went on guard the next night at the tent where the native had been attacked and dragged away into the brush. At about the same hour there was a shriek from the opposite end of the camp. Same story. Another native killed and dragged away. The next night men in the central tent heard a shout, the crashing of a heavy body, and toward the white men's tents came running a gigantic black, a knife in his hands.

When the man-eater returned the third time, he came a black who met him with a keen knife, slashed the beast on the head and neck, and droye the killer back into the brush.

The blood trail left by the beast they followed him, came on him early in the morning, and killed him. They found him an old lion, his strength and youth outgrown.

"It's always that kind," explained Mr. Clarke, pointing to a picture of the dead beast in the album, "who attacked and killed himself on the morning of the eclipse the sky was so cloudy the phenomenon was not visible."

The New Social Conscience—What it Means to You

You are not a free agent. Absolute independence is impossible in any state of society founded upon interdependence.

Complete liberty of action would permit you to inflict too many hardships upon your fellows. You are entitled to the full enjoyment of your rights, but when the unrestrained exercise of your rights would oppress your neighbor, you will control and correct your excesses.

The twentieth century is calmly seeking a middle ground between the intolerance of tyrannical and the license of liberty. Rebellious against monarchy and oligarchy our forefathers established a nation in which each man could develop himself and his fortune as far as his inherent qualities would carry him.

But in establishing the republic they granted too many legal rights which have lately found an increasing number of men who are entitled to the full enjoyment of your rights, but when the unrestrained exercise of your rights would oppress your neighbor, you will control and correct your excesses.

THIS is the story of how great and cold New York, pleasure ridden and amused to exhaustion, halted ragtime and opera to listen to a simple melody of the old south, opened its heart to a frightened girl from Georgia, yielded to her and her tender songs the portals of the city of success stormed so often and so fruitlessly by young courage.

It is the story of the girl New York calls a prodigy, but whom the folks in Georgia still call "little Bessie Lee."

She was in one of those big houses on Fifth avenue that the people on buses always look at twice and wonder if the third chauffeur coming down the front steps is really he, the hostess entertained.

And it was some seasons ago, so they hadn't been dancing the tango all the evening and Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle were not the fustlers of the court.

Possibly it was a Russian pianist or trafficked coquette or something else equally as exotic and boring. See Robert W. Chambers or Owen Johnson for details.

Little Girl from Georgia. Anyway, being both late in the season and late in the evening, they had all been entertained to extinction and were endeavoring not without success to drown their yawns in cocktails when the hostess announced that "a little girl from Georgia" would sing.

And the "little girl" shook her head so that one moment it seemed to be caught in some of those coils that would not let her go as she came out—there in that big room, so hard with white light beating down, so ringed with shimmering gowns and gleaming shoulders and faces and staring eyes, so silent, yet so cynical.

She was dressed quite simply, too. Her white dress was cut in a fashion long since forgotten. Its ruffles billowed out in stately flounces, to whirl in light about the slender waist—the bodice rather high, the modest sleeves clinging down around the elbows, a gold heart on a thin gold chain around her neck, her one ornament. She was only a girl, not yet nineteen, and perhaps it was her youth, perhaps the delicate beauty of her faint-flushed cheeks, her dark hair, her parted lips, the wistful light in her brown eyes, that pierced the armor of New York's cold cynicism and brought forth encouraging smiles rather than a sneer.

So she sang to them. At first no sound came at the sat, quite still at the polished piano. It was her first time. It seemed as if all she ever hoped and longed for was at stake.

And then—just as the cold faces and the red ones and the faces too soft and too smiling around her, seemed like to merge into one whirling rim—she remembered.

Down in far-off Thomasville an old man had kissed her good-by with a brave smile, and tonight he was still there, perhaps sitting in the veranda and seeing her before him in the moonlight on the dim white balcony.

She would sing to him the songs her mother taught her. In the days when New York was very far away and nobody cared whether you had technique or clear enunciation.

And they listened while she sang, more silent and more unsmilingly. She like choke with fear, but she kept on to the last verse— "Br'er Fox'll catch yer if yer don't." Hushaby, rockaby, mammy's 'll baby.

"Bonny Eloise" and "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," and all those others that have echoed for generations over Georgia cotton fields.

They would not let her stop. She must sing on and on and she was very tired. But she was even more afraid that she could not remember enough songs. She had to depend on more recent ones, Frank Stanton's and Rihelbert Nava's haunting melodies, and brought forth encouraging smiles rather than a sneer.

So she sang to them. At first no sound came at the sat, quite still at the polished piano. It was her first time. It seemed as if all she ever hoped and longed for was at stake.

and green fields and white-drifted skies of blue.

Again, there is her banjo. A purely affected touch, perhaps, but New York approves of Bessie Lee, smiling and arched-eyed, when she strikes quick chords to accompany "Carry Me Back to Old Virginia."

A year ago 1,500 people strained forward in the big ballroom of the Waldorf Astoria to hear little Bessie Lee sing. "Mighty Lak a Rose." That, perhaps, was her greatest triumph. It was the reception to Mr. Woodrow Wilson and the first lady of the land was also the first lady to congratulate the girl singer from the south.

It is a triumph that she has duplicated scores of times. The rooms of the National Art club, the Texas society, the Southern society, the Michigan society, dozens of others have known Bessie Lee and welcomed her often.

Her Secret of Success. What was the secret of her success?

Well, various causes helped. When Bessie Lee first went to New York, she went with Donna Hain, the Atlanta girl who won success on the ballroom floor while her friend fought for recognition in music.

It wasn't the songs alone. Influential friends were instrumental in getting her first engagements. But it was Bessie Lee herself, Bessie Lee's clear soprano, Bessie Lee's songs, Bessie Lee's really old want. I guess that's the reason.

Now, she says she wants to go into light opera, whether all her ambitious lead her. She thinks that what success she has had will be transient and that only on the stage can she find true reward.

Perhaps she is right. The lullaby that conquered New York may some day fall on deaf ears and the idol worshippers who kneel before the "phonograph miniature," some have called her, may seek other gods.

But in the meantime Bessie Lee is singing her heart out to New York. She is singing like a gentle, for the dawn has only risen on her singing season and many sunny days of lullaby and folk-song stretch before the "little girl from Georgia."

Snake Worship of Natives in New Guinea

SYDNEY, N. S. W.—Since the white man commenced to make inroads into the territory of the natives of New Guinea much has been learned of the superstitions of that country. Witch doctors and snakes seem to be of an important part in the environment of the New Guinea native. Snake worship is as much a cult with the native as the worship of the gods of the old world.

To the New Guinea natives the snake is the material symbol of the god of Baigona, who lives in a cave and is both omnipresent and omnipotent. He is something of a wonder, too, for he strikes without being heard, speaks without being heard, except by the witch doctor, and loves that Bates without seeing. He is primarily a bad god, and among his powers is the power he gives witch doctors to collect money.

The Australian commonwealth government has been studying the influence of Baigona for the past twelve months. Experts have been finding out all they can regarding the snake worship of New Guinea. They all agree on one point, and it is this—Baigona is a force to be reckoned with in that country.

The mountain where he takes up his residence has never been seen by white man, neither has Baigona appeared to them. But, then, white men have a very different method of dealing with snakes, and give the nigger his due. He is a shrewd man and is not likely to go away from a white hand.

A New Guinea native would not touch a snake if it crawled over him. Baigona has given very decided instructions that he is not to be harmed in any way by the white man. The instructions of the god are communicated through a witch doctor named Malabarbi. He alone holds the talismans by which men are initiated into the cult of Baigona. He of course charges fees, and is getting a fair bank account out of the business. Many men come to him, and on payment of the fee, are initiated into the mysteries of the faith. These men, on their part, go back to their villages and, while they do not tell their fellow men the secrets of the cult, they tell them of the greatness of the god, and so get their faith in the religion of the snake god.

When people are to be initiated into the faith of Baigona there is a ceremony in which people are surrounded over with a herb that is procured from the bush, after which they are given a snack by the witch doctor and sent to the Christian business, they are baptized into the faith of Baigona.

Origin of the Cult. As to the origin of the faith of this god, it is said that Baigona took a man into the bush many years ago and that he tore his belt out of him. Putting it into a basket, he gave it back to the man, and thus he gave him power to cure or kill, according to the strength of the money market for wizards. With these powers he must respect all snake life. He must not kill a snake, and he must not kill a man without a stomach went back to his native village the villagers were so afraid and the fear of him spread throughout the country. So the cult spread, till today every native of New Guinea holds Baigona in veneration and does not kill a snake.

Some time last year the missionaries of the Christian business, he took it up with zeal and was a constant attendant at the missionary camps. But as there did not seem to be much money in the missionary business he gave up the work, and he was out of the country. He had a great deal about him, in fact, he was a pure herb, and had lotions for wounds and leaves for plasters. With these he would cure a sick man, all the time call for Baigona. He said he would come out! He had an assistant whose duty it was to chew ginger and spit it on the patient's forehead. The patient would then be cured. Now Eroro was somewhat of an honor among the natives of the island of Baigona, did not effect a cure he returned the money he received for the work and charged the man with the disease that the disease was Baigona. Sometimes he received tobacco as pay for his work, and as in most cases he would have smoked it, he would give his patients presents of sealions in case a cure was effected. I have been thinking it would be a good thing if we had Christian doctors as honest as Eroro was.

Some of the witch doctors are seen to say the word, and as in most cases he would have smoked it, he would give his patients presents of sealions in case a cure was effected. I have been thinking it would be a good thing if we had Christian doctors as honest as Eroro was.

drop-cricket tableaus. The village boys would be lined up to sing, the girls would sit around and smoke and audibly state on the wonders of Baigona. Then the evil spirits would be driven out from the fingertips with much flourish.

Theatrical Climaxes. Only once is it known that a snake was killed. That was in the Opi district. At once there was a commotion. The witch doctor of the district was sent for, and he obtained the body of the snake, and, using a motion picture camera, he made a film of the head, gave out that the native who killed it would die in a few days.

He put the body of the snake in a can with some coconuts and offered it to go away and kill its murderer. Then he set the canon afire. Sure enough, in four or five days the snake was dead. It is highly probable he believed so in Baigona that he killed himself.

Baigona witch doctors get very rich. They, of course, affect coarse clothes. If they fall at first there is always the chance of a second fee, so it is not at all remarkable that the first attempt fails. They take a pig in place, dogs and so on. They give in return a kind of insurance over death and from spirits. If they cannot cure they threaten death and sickness.

Then, when the white man interfered, the witch doctors were after him he put the shutters up, and at the same time shows him the business end of a rifle, the doctor would then throw his line into the river and return content for a while with what money he has got.

Witch doctors fear life very much. They are fond of the villagers on fear of harm or in payment of a fee, which seems to the witch doctor does is to smoke and decorate his face with red paint or black his head with feathers. It is a very remarkable thing that when any of the villagers have the zoon bug to secure spirits such as whiskey from the white men the witch doctor usually has a few fish and froths at the mouth. Stranger still, whiskey seems to be the only cure.

The ignorance of the New Guinea native is astonishing. Among other things he dearly loves to be vaccinated. He considers it a remarkable thing, especially if the swelling on

Where Crime Is Rampant. The river of the territory, which is under the jurisdiction of the Australian government, says it is almost certain that when the white men get properly into the interior much will be heard of headhunting, cannibalism and other fiendish, outrageous customs.

It is true that there is some danger of the white man punning into this unknown country, but the Australian government has decreed that every mile of the land must be laid bare to the eye of the white man. This is being gradually done by the opening of strong police districts. Should there be revealed stories of cannibalism, and the like, we will doubtless remember that one of the greatest explorers of the world said: "It is easier to cross the Alps with an alpenstock than to cross an ordinary hill in New Guinea with a rifle."

The government of the territory says: "The object of extending the government influence is to stop cannibalism, headhunting, Baigona worship and other horrors, the existence of which is a disgrace to Australia. We want to return a kind of insurance over death and from spirits. If they cannot cure they threaten death and sickness."

"Outside influence, scenes of violence, and the like, we will doubtless remember that one of the greatest explorers of the world said: "It is easier to cross the Alps with an alpenstock than to cross an ordinary hill in New Guinea with a rifle."

Suffrage Urged Here 20 Years Ago

THE following article advocating woman suffrage was written 20 years ago by Walter R. Hill, who at one time was chancellor of the University of Georgia:

I do not think that women have the right to vote in this country, and it is undesirable. No rational argument has been or can be advanced against it. Ever since the world accepted the idea that government and taxation imply representation, the case for woman suffrage—so far as it depends on right—has been completely made out.

The sole question, therefore, which remains for any difference of opinion is this: "Are there valid and sufficient reasons for exempting women from the exercise of this right?" Or, not the exercise of that right?

2. The removal of the moral deformity of our civilization, the double standard of virtue.

3. The abolition of the great inequality of partnership of the government with the crime and crime of the liquor traffic; and the partnership of the municipal government and vice which now exists in all our large cities.

OFFICERS OF YAARAB TEMPLE, HOSTS TO CONVENTION

All Ready, Now, for Atlanta's Greatest Convention!

TIME OF THEIR LIVES TO BE GIVEN SHRINERS

Balls, Dances, Exhibitions, Garden Parties, Southern Suppers and Hundreds of Other Attractions Prepared for Visitors—Crescent, Star and Scimitar to Have Keys of the City, and to Every Wearer of the Fez Will Be Accorded the Hand of Good Fellowship

With all her buildings daily decorated from basement to roof and with every resident ready to extend cordial greetings to the thousands of Shriners who are to make merry here this week, Atlanta is in carnival mood. The next four days will be one continuous round of festivities, for Atlanta is determined that all who come this week shall go back to their scattered homes tired but happy and ready to swear that they have had the "time of their lives." Balls, receptions, luncheons, races, exhibition drills, open-air dancing, garden parties, southern suppers, everything that the heart and brain of hospitable local Shriners could devise will contribute to the gaiety of the week, while the visitors themselves will augment the pace by entertainments of their own.

The crescent, star and scimitar will rule the city, and to every wearer of the fez will be accorded the hand of friendship and good fellowship. At all the entertainments, formalities will be eliminated. There will be no introductions, but everybody is expected to make himself or herself known to those who wear the sign of the Shrine. The Atlanta women have entered into the spirit of the week, and have pledged themselves to meet and greet and welcome all who wear the star and crescent. Despite the fact that thousands of strangers will be in the city, the local Shriners have made up their minds that the personal equation shall enter into all the entertaining, especially in connection with the festival planned in honor of the ladies who will accompany the Shriners to the city.

ES SELAMU ALEIKVM

Welcome, thrice welcome, O Sons of the Desert. Our tents are swept and garnished, and they are yours and all that is in them. May you whose caravans have crossed the desert find Atlanta a pleasant oasis, with freely running springs and full-fruited palm trees. May you doff dull care with the dusty garments of your pilgrimage and make the season one of feasting and merriment.

The cymie, the asetic and the man who doesn't like noise have been banished beyond our city's walls, and the Spirit of Carnival reigns as Caliph. Music is his Grand Vizier and the Feast and the Dance his retinue.

Remember, oh Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, our city is yours. Do with it as you will.

The official program of entertainments will begin Monday at 11 o'clock with an organ recital at the auditorium at that hour. At 2:30 o'clock Monday afternoon the California delegation will be in the city, and at 3 o'clock there will be a grand parade of the city, and at 5 o'clock there will be another grand ball at the auditorium. It is expected that fully 5,000 persons will attend this ball and that approximately 2,000 will be dancing nearly all the time.

PARADES OF SHRINERS WILL SET NEW RECORD

Marching Spectacles Tuesday Morning and Tuesday Night Will Surpass Anything Ever Presented in Atlanta or the South—No Similar Event Has Ever Equalled Them in Volume and Melody of Band Music—Gorgeous Uniforms of the Participants Will Rival Hues of Rainbow

Joining Parade—8:30 a. m. Tuesday. Night Parade—7:30 p. m. Tuesday. Exhibition—Wednesday morning, at Piedmont park. That's the formal announcement of the marching spectacles the Shriners will give Atlanta, but it falls many leagues short of describing the perpetual parade of Oriental pomp and pageantry that will file, phalanx on phalanx, through the streets of the city from the time the first patrol blares forth martial strains in the shadows of the Terminal until taps is sounded on the departure of the final caravan.

The parade, you see, is by no means confined to the "main drag," and spectators will probably have a much better chance to witness the procession if they take up some post not on Whitehall or Peachtree streets, as both of these thoroughfares are certain to be packed to suffocation. Arrangements are being made as far as possible to take care of the crowds. The benches that have been erected on the old Capital City club lot at the corner of Ellis and Peachtree will not do much more than accommodate the members of the Imperial council. Other vantage points will be at a premium, because—

These parades, Tuesday morning's and Tuesday night's—the formation of which and the line of march will be exactly the same as the morning parade—will be the most gorgeous parades that ever traversed the streets of a southern city. Atlanta has never known anything to equal them. They will be the biggest parade ever attempted at a Shrine convention, and Shrine conventions have the record for big parades. Good weather means a perfect procession Tuesday morning—Tuesday morning when the hot sun is just beginning to flicker Peachtree street and the hot sun is just beginning to flicker Peachtree street and the hot sun is just beginning to flicker Peachtree street.

VETERAN TELLS HIS OWN STORY OF HOW ATLANTA FELL

Report of Committee Named to Compile History of Strife for Atlanta—"The Heart of the Confederacy"—is Here Given

The following description of the civil war battles around Atlanta is taken verbatim from a pamphlet compiled in 1886 by a committee, representing the Confederate veterans of Atlanta. It was published on September 21 of that year, with a map of which the above is a reproduction. The committee was composed of Colonel L. P. Thomas of the 42d Ga. S. A., W. L. Calhoun, who was mayor when the city fell; Colonel Albert Howell and Captain Evan P. Howell, Confederate officers; and R. M. Clayton, who like the others, took part

In the fighting here. They gathered their information "by personal investigation and from parties yet living who were participants in the struggle for Atlanta."

The struggle for Atlanta—"the heart of the Confederacy"—began on the 5th of May, 1864, when General Sherman ordered a forward movement of his forces from a point just north of the city, composed of the Army of the Tennessee, commanded by Major General James B. McPherson; the Army of the Ohio, Major General John M. Schofield; and the Army of the Cumberland, Major General George H. Thomas.

The Confederate forces, under General Joseph E. Johnston, amounted to 42,500 men; artillery, 2,412, and cavalry, 2,532, of a total of 48,000.

A few days after, Sherman was reinforced by 14,000 cavalry, swelling his army to 112,819. These figures are official.

Thus began the campaign which eventually cost the fall of Atlanta, after a series of engagements from Dalton through Resaca, Tanner's Ferry, Adairsville, Cassville, Allatoona, New Hope Church, Kennesaw, Marietta, Chatahoochee, Peachtree Creek and Atlanta.

On the 17th of July General Johnston, seeing that the federals were advancing on him from several bridges over the Chattahoochee, gave directions to his chief engineer to make preparations for the next day's contest. But he was not destined to fight that battle, as on that day he received telegraphic orders from Richmond to turn over his army to General Hood. This he did promptly, explaining to General Hood his plans for attacking Sherman at Peachtree Creek and the moving of his army from the south bank of the Chattahoochee and striking the enemy on his flank.

Active operations were begun on the 19th, when Davis' division of Palmer's corps (Federal) attempted to cross Peachtree creek at Howell's Mill, but was repulsed by the Confederates, gave way and crossed somewhat lower down. General Howell's woods division also established itself on the south bank, thus making three columns of Thomas army that had crossed.

BATTLE OF PEACHTREE CREEK.

On the morning of the 19th of July General Hood formed the battle facing Peachtree creek, the left resting near Pace's ferry road, the right corner of the city. The Army of the Cumberland (Thomas) were bridging Peachtree while McPherson's and Schofield's forces were moving toward the Georgia railroad and Decatur. General Stewart's (Confederate) corps was on the left, Hardee in the center, and Cheatham on the right. General G. W. Smith, with Georgia state troops, was also on the right of Cheatham. The order to assault the federals was timed for 1 o'clock p. m. on the 20th. General Hood's assault was not made, however, till 4 p. m. Night soon coming on, hostilities ceased. The fighting of the day was as fierce as any day during the war. To understand the situation it is well to show here why the combat at Peachtree creek was so disastrous. At about 1 o'clock Hardee was ordered to send a division to support Wheeler's cavalry, which was falling back upon Atlanta, pressed by McPherson. Cheatham's division of the railroad where Wheeler's exhausted cavalry had made their last stand. The order withdrawing troops from Hardee was disastrous. The federals were securely entrenched, and the Confederates too weak to cope with them.

BATTLE OF ATLANTA.

The following day—July 21, 1864—found the Federals pushing forward and entrenching near the lines of the Confederate forces. The first attack was on Bald Hill, half a mile south of the city. The Confederates received the assault, but was compelled to yield. Hood's flanks being now exposed, he determined to withdraw into the hills nearer the city, which he did during the night. Early on the morning of the 22nd Sherman's army was in full preparation for an advance. They found the entrenchments in front of Schofield and Thomas abandoned by the Confederates, and a general advance was ordered. Schofield's head of column came in full view of the city, at the Howard house (No. 6 on the map).

The Confederates had entrenched on the hills opposite their skirmishers holding Clear Creek. The Federals began shelling, and the Confederates retreated behind their entrenchments. About 1 o'clock, Sherman, from the Howard house, had the field occupied by his artillery and ordered Scott Cleburne and Maney's divisions moved out to the rear, but were soon surrounded and suffered heavy losses. The Confederate line pressed on, however, to Bald Hill and began the ascent to attack the Federals on Leggett's Hill. Leggett had just repelled an attack from the rear when Cheatham's assault was made. Part of the Federal forces were pushed back to the Georgia railroad, where they formed a new line. Cheatham now pushed forward in front of a Federal force which had in the meantime moved forward, poured volley after volley into the Federals, causing them to fall back. Here it was the Federal Battery was captured by the Confederates breaking through the Federal lines and turning the guns against

COULD AN ATLANTA LET GET TOGETHER AND RAISE $60,000 FOR THE SHRINERS IN A DAY

THE SHRINERS OF NORTH AMERICA MUST MEET IN ATLANTA IN 1914.

Atlanta must raise a fund to entertain them with fitting magnificence.

Come on, Atlanta!

Let's make a twelve-hour campaign of it, and raise that fund before sundown.

To start it, The Journal gives $500.

Let the town get ready to follow, and when Wednesday dawns let the money pour in, and let there be $60,000—the amount that the local Shriners need—in sight before dark that evening, so that Atlanta can say to the country:

"That Shriners' convention is ours!"

For several days past the Atlanta Shriners have been planning and organizing that day of entertainment and fund-raising. Without it, they could not invite the Shriners' great gathering to come here. With it, they are confident that their invitation will be accepted.

Atlanta is known to have the hotels, the people, the town.

Tuesday at 1 o'clock they met again. Reports from every ramification of the work showed an amazing state of affairs. Atlanta was never readier to respond liberally to any call upon it than she is to this for the Shriners' entertainment.

COME ON AND SEE A LIVE CITY.

Therefore, let's make a record with it, and raise that "whole amount" in the shortest time that any city ever has scored in a similar matter. Atlanta is ready to subscribe over $50,000 in a day. Let her do it.

Let the Shriners see that Atlanta is a live city.

"Success Is Certain; Means Untold Benefit"

SENATOR HOKES SMITH.

"Washington, D. C., April 8.

"The Atlanta Journal's effort to bring the 1914 Shriners' convention to Atlanta should receive the approval and encouragement of all Shriners.

"I have confidence in the 'Atlanta Spirit,' and believe that success will crown the effort to land the big convention.

"The Shriners are representative of a fine type of American citizenship, and the presence of them in Atlanta would prove advantageous to the city and state in many ways.

"Coming from all sections of the country, they would carry back to their homes the best of Atlanta, and Georgia, and untold benefits would follow.

"HOKE SMITH.

her enterprise because of it, when we hear Atlanta's delegation, "We did it in a day. Come on and see a live city!"

Memphis, a hustler who keeps Atlanta setting a lively pace to stay ahead, raised $50,000 in two weeks and two days. That practically means that any city ever has scored in a similar matter.

Atlanta is ready to subscribe over $50,000 in a day. Let her do it.

Let the Shriners see that Atlanta is a live city.

Plutarch wrote about women who carried dogs about in their arms, and one of the Roman emperors said something about women who fussed over lapdogs when they should be

The fact about dogs—and it is not new—is that some persons like them greatly, some like them less and some do not like them

It is very much the same about boiled turnip or clam chowder. But depth of feeling as easily engendered animosity, suddenness in quarrel, are sometimes more noticeable in discussions of the question of whether dogs should be liked than that of whether the flavor of turnips is agreeable or otherwise, though the discussion is as fruitless of other results as an argument about flavor.

EVERY Bell telephone exchange has its wire chief. He is unknown to the subscriber, but his important task is to see that the talk tracks, both inside and outside the exchange, are kept constantly in good working order. Day and night, the work of testing the lines and apparatus goes on. Complaints are promptly followed up and breaks are often repaired before the subscriber knows of the trouble or is inconvenienced.

The constant vigilance of the wire chiefs keeps the 14,000,000 miles of talk tracks and the intricate central office equipment of the Bell system in readiness for instant service.
